Art Students Carry Out New Project

This past week, Salem students contributed their artistic talent to make an educational first possible. Dr. Elizabeth Welch, head of our Education Department, has devised a plan by which school children touring Old Salem will have an actual educational experience.

The plan is to give the children an orientation class before they begin their tour of the museum and other sights in Old Salem. As the lecturer tells the children about the various things they will see, she will place small models of the sights on a large magnetized board so the children will become familiar with the sights while she talks. In this capacity Salem art students fulfilled their civic duty.

With only five days to go before the project was to open, the small models for the magnetized board had not been made; so Thrace Baker, Cecilia Corbett, Rose Dickinson, Isabella Gibbs, Murrianne Linker, Peggy Newsome, Joy Perkins, Elizabeth Smith, Margaret Whitehurst, and Betty Morrison pitched in to help. Under the direction of Mr. Shewmake, the girls made and painted small wooden models of the houses, the musical instruments, the household furnishings, the civic buildings, and the people who comprised Old Salem.

Old Salem is the first restoration project to include such a plan in its operation and it is imagined that other restoration projects will follow this mode. All of it was made possible through the plans of Dr. Welch, and the orientation program is planned to suit the students of the various age levels.

Art students not only practiced their educational art but helped their community in one of its most worthwhile educational projects.

Easter Bunny Goes To Party

By Nancy Walker

Peter Cottontail, candy eggs, and Easter fun will be the order for the afternoon when a busload of Salemites descends on the Memorial Industrial School at 4:00 today. The occasion is the annual Easter party, which is sponsored for the Negro orphanage by the Y. W. C. A.

While the excited children are searching for the girls they met at the Christmas Party, party chairmen Jane Langston and Ann Knight will make preparations for the big event—the egg hunt in the woods surrounding the school grounds.

Pre-hunt activities will include musical entertainment by Peggy Daniel and Louise Pharr and games in the auditorium.

The lucky finders of the two golden eggs are to receive special prizes. When the last egg has been found, everyone will return to the auditorium, where the party will be concluded with refreshments of ice cream and candy.
