Two Concerts Scheduled; Include City Symphony And Calvacade of Songs

College Trio To Perform

The first performance in Winston-Salem of the Beethoven Triple Concerto will be the highlight of the Winston-Salem Symphony program on November 26. The Salem College Trio will be performing it with the symphony with John Iuele conducting. The program will begin at 8:15 at Reynolds Auditorium.

The Salem College Trio is composed of Eugene Jacobowsky, violinist, Charles Medlin, cellist, and Hans Heidemann, pianist, all teachers in the School of Music. Although all of them have performed individually as guest artists of the symphony, this will be their first performance as a trio with the symphony.

This will be a sort of prelude to a series of three consecutive concerts they are planning to give here this spring. These will be benefit concerts for the Mary Jones Memorial scholarship at which time they will play all the Beethoven trios.

The trio has given chamber music concerts in Asheville and Charlotte and is planning return performances this year. This is the original Salem College Trio which was organized five years ago.

Mr. Hunter Of Radio City Leads Chorale

Second in the series of Civic Music Concerts will be the Cavalcade of Song Tuesday night at 8:30 in Reynolds Auditorium.

Conducting the chorale will be Mr. Ralf Hunter of Radio City Music Hall.

This is the first year that the famed Radio City Conductor has been persuaded to tour. Since the Robert Shaw chorale broke up, Mr. Hunter got most of the members as they wanted to join another organization as a group.

The Robert Shaw body was a nucleus and other members have been added also.

The first half of the program will be principally classical music and the second half will be restricted to spirituals and Broadway hits. Mr. Hunter will present also some of his personal renditions of these.

Committee To Evaluate Our Teacher Training

From November 18 to 20, a committee from the National Council for the Accrediation of Teacher Training will be at Salem to evaluate its teacher training program. Salem, which will be the first college in North Carolina to be evaluated, consists of five people. The University of Louisville and Madison College each have one representative. The remaining members are the Dean of Coker College, and a representative from the North Carolina State Department of Public Instruction. The committee will use Miss McNeilly's office for its headquarters.

During the period of study of Salem's program, the committee will discuss with both students and faculty the training program here, and will observe various classes. The committee will attend the FTA meeting to be held on November 20.

The only social event that is planned for this period of evaluation is a luncheon. Guests will be the administrations of the Winston-Salem City Schools and of the County Schools.

News Briefs

Thanksgiving sign-outs will be approved during office hours starting Thursday, November 21, but they must be completed by noon, Saturday, November 23. If you plan to go anywhere except home, please have the permission to do so on file in the Dean of Students' Office when you sign out.

Dr. Welch, Education Head

The committee, which is headed, is unusual in that it is a Liberal Arts College that incorporates a teacher training program.
