

Students Will Be Asked To Give Thanksgiving Offering

Saturday morning I was led to 7:15 breakfast by my roommate, Miss "early to bed, early to rise" Cooper, when my half shut eyes observed a variety of animals swinging from the flag pole, the mimosa tree, hanging on bushes, or standing on the driveway. Approaching the "wee beasties" I realized they were stuffed animals that had been absconded from sophomores by the "obviously idle" freshmen. Monday afternoon the freshmen struck the senior dorm as they roamed the halls spraying rooms with perfumed deodorizers and again on Wednesday morning a band of freshmen were caught with long poles in their hands—trying to reach the windows of third floor Biting. All these pranks sound like such fun—but, remember—too much of a good thing can be a bad thing — and moderation in all things.

For the benefit of those whose "academic pursuits" deterred them from attending the Foreign Students Party Tuesday night in the Student Center—it may be said, unbiased on my own part, that the erine, Aggie, and Rachele were us-erine, Aggie, and Rachel were ushered individually to the party by roommates or friends who thought up a variety of "little white lies". Thanks should be given to the nurses who agreed to detain the foreign students in the infirmary while announcements were made to the Student Body concerning the party.

A box will be placed in every dormitory in which Thanksgiving offerings may be placed. These offerings will consist of "canned foods" only. The "Y" Cabinet will distribute the collected food offerings as a gift to a needy member of the Maintenance Crew.

Ladies, please pass the word. The girls in Lehman Dormitory have requested that no more roses be sent to them until one of their new bunches dies. One disturbed resident of Lehman pleaded that she no longer has any place to study—the roses are all over. Alas and alack, such are the trials and tribulations of the more favored of the opposite sex.

At last Salem College is making an attempt to protect the feminine virtues of South Dormitory residents. For years the South residents have been forced to parade down the front hall steps, often arrayed in bare necessities, and maintained some semblance of composure as young gentlemen unexpectedly would mount the front porch steps and innocently gaze at the passing vision of a much embarrassed young lady. Although South residents are not the bashful type—giving passing parades in bedtime attire is not their favorite passtime. So, Mr. Yarborough has arrived on the scene with hammer and nails and boards—and is building a partition between the stairway and front hall. Chilvary is not yet dead.

Looks as if I can finally pack up my summer clothes and send them home. It's getting cold, a bit prematurely, too, I'd say—since it's only November 21. Jean Mauldin and Bebe Daniel have been wearing their best sweaters this week to show their pins off to the best advantage. There's something that a pin does to a sweater that nothing else can do. June Gregson is pinned, too, a bit prematurely, I'd say, since she's only been engaged two weeks.

Are we a group of "dull normals" or simply unconcerned and uninterested students? The deficiency list has been a cause for much discussion from faculty, students, and (I'm sure) parents. What will be the means by which we reduce this list next semester . . . reduce the level of academic work in the classroom? Accelerated work and application on the part of students? The latter seems to be the more logical means.

A mass exodus will take place November 26 when Salemites go home for some turkey and dressing. Until then "Five more days 'til vacation . . ." Have fun!

Humanities Club Meets In December

The next meeting of the Humanities Club will be held December 5, the first Thursday after Thanksgiving holidays. There are tentative plans to have this meeting at the Winston-Salem Art Gallery. Dr. Byers will conduct the program. The subject, which may be on social theories, will be announced definitely later. Coffee will be served as usual.

Future plans include in February a program on education and in March one on religious sense.

Students who plan to attend the December meeting will be asked to sign a list which will be posted in the dining hall. Transportation will be arranged.

Education

teaching your senior year.

All girls, no matter what grade they wish to teach, are together first semester in a course known as Education 220 — the Principles and Philosophy of Teaching. In this you study the history of education and trace the philosophies of men in education.

As soon as you underclassmen get in this class, you will find out why the juniors and seniors have a big laugh whenever Time Lines are mentioned. In this course, in order to see education develop and compare the philosophies of the different periods, you make a time line. Education students cut out little pieces of colored paper and buy rubber cement. Then the night before it's due you may overhear a conversation similar to this one in the dorm—"Watch out, you can't have the whole living room to stretch out your time line." "Yeah, but I've already taken up the hallway with Plato and Quintellian through Erasmus, and I need more room for Comenius, Mann and Dewey." "Well, how about stretching it across the square then?"

This is the course which is responsible for the beautiful bulletin boards out in the hall. All students make a bulletin board for this is a main method in education. This is the course in which projects—busy work—begins. Projects are another large aspect of Salem's Education Department.

Juniors are bewildered and think—how can I get up in front of a classroom and teach? But just you wait till your senior year — then everything takes shape, falls into place, and there you are — Miss Teacher.

Clewell Votes To Support French Orphan

This year, the members of Clewell dorm voted to support a little boy in France. This is the third year this boy has been supported by Clewell. His name is Domonique Quiberteau, born June 27th, 1955. His father was a carpenter, just able to make enough money for his family. Mr. Quiberteau, however, was called to North Africa and was killed in action on June 21, 1955. Mme. Quiberteau, now living with her two children in Paris, is earning a poor salary and therefore, the $60 given to Domini-que will be very helpful.

The care of the child is done through Save the Children Federation, Inc. in New York. This organization specializes in finding sponsors for needy children all over Europe and Asia.

It's a rare bird indeed who doesn't care for the good taste of Coke! In fact, you might even call him an odd ball. After all, 58 million times a day somebody, somewhere, enjoys Coca-Cola. All these people just can't be wrong!
