

Freshmen Jay Jones, Batesburg, S. C., and Jane Hall, Belmont, N. C., find that strange rooms and new roommates cause confusion and disorder when study and hair-drying conflict.

Learning about Salem from the trusty white Handbook is a regular part of orientation. One such group convenes in Bitting living room: (l. to r.) Frances Bloodworth, Florence, S. C., advisor Heather Peebles, Cecie Boren, Greensboro, N. C., Margaret Bourdeaux, Davidson, N. C., and Baird Brown, Tampa, Fla.

Tests, tests, and tests filled the days of the freshmen as they learned their proficiency in the languages and mathematics.

Class Of '66 Arrives On Campus For Orientation

By Myrtie Moon Bilbro
FITS Chairman

"Bricks, Books, and All That"—these were some of the things which filled the minds of the eager freshmen on that memorable day, September 16. That of course was the beginning date of their college career—a day of anticipation, questions, and wonderment. Rain was a much too familiar sight on that Sunday. However, even the bad weather could not dampen the spirits of the Class of '66. Although many Daddies and brothers left a little damper than they arrived—all suitcases, hairdriers, typewriters, and stuffed animals were finally unpacked.

"I wonder what my roommate will be like?" This was a question over which all the freshmen had pondered, I'm sure. Letters concerning each one's family, friends (male and female), and hobbies had been exchanged. Although they had visions of Miss America, Einsteins, and the like, most of them had never met. When they did have that important encounter with their new Salem sister, they found other girls just as excited and nervous as they were.

Tests, tests, and more tests! Yes, math, French, Spanish, and Latin were familiar topics of conversation on Monday and Tuesday, the days set aside for the placement tests. Although some freshmen revealed anxiety concerning them, the results showed that they should not have worried too much, for most of them did very well.

Handbook study was another highlight of orientation week. Each night at 6:30 advisors and advisees gathered in their rooms with paper, pencil, an alert mind, and a full stomach to study and learn about rules, regulations, Honor Tradition, Student Government, and various other important things. All of this was in preparation not only for the handbook test, but for the coming days and years at Salem.

Orientation was enjoyable, interesting, and enlightening to both the freshmen and the Orientation Committee. We only hope that now the Class of '66 has begun to love Salem and her strong walls, stately shadows, and "Bricks, Books, and All That."

Salem Displays New Trends In Dixie Classic Fair On Oct. 8-13

Salem College is among the three schools taking part in the Dixie Classic Fair in Winston-Salem, October 8-13. Besides Salem, Wake Forest College and Appalachian State Teachers College will also have booths with the theme, "We're glad we live in North Carolina." The Salem booth will portray the atmosphere of Salem and will show what is available at the school in the way of service to the northwestern area of North Carolina and to the individual. The modern trends at Salem such as the language lab, the reading course, the science department, and the proposed new building will be shown.

Stee Gee Plan Two Assemblies

The next two assemblies have been scheduled by the Student Government.

The Honor Assembly will be Monday night, October 1. There will be discussion groups instead of the regular assembly on Tuesday, October 2. These plans are not definite.

Thursday, October 4, is Founders Day. Reverend Clark Thompson will speak on the History of the Moravian Church and Salem's Moravian background.

In assembly on September 2 Mrs. Cummings from the refector Mrs. Parrish from the laundry and Dr. Bahnsen from the infirmary discussed the rules and the service of each of those facilities. Mr. Peterson led the student body in group sing for the rest of the assembly.

Monday, September 27, was the YWCA community service assembly. Members of the Y gave talks and skits to explain the various Y projects.

Welcome Salemites

Begin this term with an A (line):

- Harburt
- Gordon Ford
- Austin Hill

Also Boe Jest Wraps

Add a Shirt:

- Country Shirt
- Lady Hathaway
- Gant
- Activair

And a Sweater:

- Fair Isle Shetlands Cardigan or Pullover
- Camel's Hair
- Cashmere
- Wondermere

Don't Forget!

Bass Weejuns

All Found At

Bocock-Stroud Co.

501 W. Fourth St.
PA 4-2421

Ladies,

While you were away . . . something new was added.

Visit the elegant new

ALPINE ROOM SUPPER CLUB

of the

PARKWAY
CHALET RESTAURANT

Academy St. at Peters Creek Pkwy.

MORRIS SERVICE

Next To Carolina Theater

Sandwiches — Salads

Sodas

"The Place Where Salemites Meet"