Salem's Married Students Busy With School, Home

By Anne Kendrick

Salem's married students are continually busy with their school life and their home life, but they all agree that the combination of school and home is well worth the extra time and work that it takes. Jane Hedgpeth Adcock, Fallie Lohr Cecil, and transfer student Judy Smithson are married to men who are also students. They agree that the fact that both husband and wife have to study makes it easier to keep a good study schedule than if one were out of school and one were not. Jane Adcock says that Gene, a second year medical student at Bowman Gray, often helps her finish housework so that they can sit down together to study.

Judy Smithson, a transfer from the University of North Carolina Nursing School, lost a year's credit in transferring from a nursing course to liberal arts, but she feels that it is important for her to finish her education since her husband, Tony, will be in the medical profession. Judy says that it is a real challenge to her to be a wife, a homemaker, and a student all at the same time. Fallie Cecil has no classes on Tuesdays and Thursdays so she devotes that time to her housework and to cooking special dishes which she loves to prepare when she has a little extra time.

Group Petitions Against Bill

Margy Harris and Jean King attended the State Student Legislature of North Carolina Interim Council Meeting at Wake Forest Sunday afternoon, October 20.

The State Student Legislature is a mock legislature, held by North Carolina colleges and universities in the Capitol in Raleigh. Each college sends a delegation which presents its bill and works for its adoption by the legislature. Bills that are passed may be deemed worthy of consideration of the North Carolina General Assembly and presented to it. This gives college students a voice in North Carolina's laws.

The Interim Council voted to have the State Student Legislature the second week in March and suggested banquet speakers. It also passed a resolution in favor of the repeal of the amendment HB 1395 (Speaker Ban Law).

HAPPINESS CAN'T BUY MONEY

With tuition costs steadily on the rise, more and more undergraduates are looking into the student loan plan. If you are one such, you would do well to consider the case of Leonid Sigafos.

Leonid, the son of an unemployed bean gleaner in Straightened Circumstances, Montana, had his heart set on going to college, but his father, alas, could not afford to send him. Leonid applied for a Regents Scholarship, but his reading speed, alas, was not very rapid—three words an hour—and before he could finish the first page of his exam, the Regents had closed their briefcases crossly and gone home. Leonid then applied for an athletic scholarship, but he had, alas, only a single athletic skill—picking up beebies with his toes—and this, alas, aroused only fleeting enthusiasm among the coaches.

And then—happy day!—Leonid learned of the student loan plan: he could borrow money for his tuition and repay it in easy installments after he left school!

Happily Leonid enrolled in the Southeastern Montana College of Lanolin and Restoration Drama and happily began a college career that grew happier year by year. Indeed, it became altogether ecstatic in his senior year because Leonid met a coed named Anna Livia Plurabelle with hair like beaten gold and eyes like two sockets full of Lake Louise. Love gripped them in its big moist palm, and they were betrothed on St. Crispin's Day.

Happily they made plans to be married immediately after commencement—plans, alas, that were never to come to fruition because Leonid, alas, learned that Anna Livia, like himself, was in college on a student loan, which meant that he not only had to repay his own loan after graduation but also Anna Livia's and the job, alas, that was waiting for Leonid at the Butte Otter Works simply did not pay enough, alas, to cover both loans, plus rent and food and clothing and television repairs.

Heavy hearted, Leonid and Anna Livia sat down and lit Marlboro Cigarettes and tried to find an answer to their problem—and, sure enough, they did! I do not know whether or not Marlboro Cigarettes helped them find an answer; all I know is that Marlboros taste good and look good and filter good, and when the clouds gather and the world is black as the pit from pole to pole, it is a heap of comfort and satisfaction to be sure that Marlboros will always provide the same easy pleasure, the same unstinting tobacco flavor, in all times and climes and conditions. That's all I know.

Leonid and Anna Livia, I say, did find an answer—a very simple one. If their student loans did not come due until they left school, why then they just wouldn't leave school! So after receiving their bachelor's degrees, they re-enrolled and took master's degrees. After that they took doctor's degrees—loads and loads of them—until today Leonid and Anna Livia, both aged 87, both still in school, hold doctorates in Philosophy, Humane Letters, Jurisprudence, Veterinary Medicine, Civil Engineering, Optometry, Woodpulp, and Dewey Decimals.

Their student loans, at the end of the last fiscal year, amounted to a combined total of nineteen million dollars—a sum which they probably would have found some difficulty in repaying had not the Department of the Interior recently declared them a National Park.
