

In the Sore Thumb Department Mr. Cashion beats a proof of The Salemite as Bill holds the proof paper.

Sun Printers Help Staff With Weekly Publication

By Robbin Causey

Have you ever wondered, when you read your Salemite, just how the articles finally come to be printed? Did you ever wonder just who printed the paper? In our case, that job belongs largely to two men, Bill Everhart and Lindsay Cashion, who work closely with The Salemite at Sun Printing Company.

Bill Everhart, a native of Winston-Salem, and father of three children, ages 14, 11, and 8, has been in printing at Sun for sixteen years. He took printing when he was a student at Reynolds High School. "Bill," as we who set the type each week at Sun call him, says of his job, "You don't have occasion here to be too original." He says his job is a combination of compositor, pressman, and handyman. Since he has been working at Sun, progress has come through new equipment rather than change.

Bill explained, "Working in an organization where the employees are few makes it imperative that some will do more than one job for an efficient operation."

Our work here largely is made up of two types of printing. Letterpress is one and offset is another. In letterpress printing type forms are used. The Salemite is printed from type forms. Offset printing uses another form of impression. The form is photographed and plates are made from the negatives to reproduce the image on the desired stock.

Our business is made up primarily of commercial jobs such as letterheads, statements, booklets, circulars, business forms and imprinting of a number of items too numerous to mention."

Bill is tall with a large frame. His slightly graying short cut hair and impish smile are welcome sights every Wednesday. Bill jokes with us and teases us about being lazy. In turn, we kid him about his spelling in setting up headlines.

Pierrettes Hold Spring Tryouts

The Pierrette Players will present their spring production, Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad, the satirical hit by Arthur L. Kopit, on March 10, 11, and 12.

Tryouts were held February 9. A production staff meeting will be announced later. Anyone interested in doing crew work should watch for notices of future meetings.

"Mr. Cashion" loves to joke with us too. Yet he goes out of his way to do favors for us. He supplies us with aprons which have our own names printed on them. He offers us cold drinks while we work.

Mr. Cashion is a short, wiry man who has been in printing all his life. He has been with Sun Printing for 32 years, and he is vice-president of the company.

Mr. Cashion, who has two grown boys in South Carolina and three grandchildren, celebrated his fiftieth wedding anniversary last June.

His biggest joy is his relationship with Salemite editors. He has known all the editors for 32 years and he hears from them from "all over the world." The editor of the paper in 1935 still has Mr. Cashion print her Christmas cards. Mr. Cashion says he has "enjoyed printing The Salemite more than any other customer we have."

When asked to give his opinions of The Salemite, Bill said, "Under the circumstances they do a remarkable job in the length of time they have to do it."

Rev. John Wall Sees Movement

February 18, the Rev. John A. Wall will be speaking in assembly on the Ecumenical Movement. Rev. Wall, assistant Priest at St. Leo's Catholic Church in Winston-Salem will talk on the changes recently made by the Ecumenical Council and the Catholic participation in this movement, which dates back to the spring of 1963.

The Rev. Wall, originally from Greensboro, attended Georgetown University and studied theology at North American College in Rome. He was ordained there in December.

The Rev. Wall has worked for two years with the Marines at Camp Lejeune before coming to St. Leo's in January, 1964. In Winston-Salem he has been especially active with youth in the CYO and the Newman Club, a Catholic high school and college organization.
