

Turtle Enters Indoor Race For Salemites

WASHINGTON, Mar. 1 — The stands here are empty now. The sound and the fury of 51 hard shells scraping the wooden ramp in the granddaddy of all turtle races has died.

But somewhere in Washington, yesterday's competitors are today's pets and have slipped back into their long winter's sleep, and pretty Libby Lineberger from Chicago can one day tell her grandchildren that back in 1965 she was Miss Turtle International.

Students at American University are still talking about how Goy, AU's favorite son, held off a last-minute rally by Vassar's tiny Matty and charged across the finish line in 58 seconds, hardly winded by his 35-foot romp to the winner's circle.

It was a day to remember—last Friday afternoon—as Washington's press corps turned out en masse for the grand prix of indoor turtle racing. Television cameras whirred; radio announcers caught the excitement of the race on tape; reporters tried out their turtles in interviews, and pretty AU cheerleaders whooped it up for photographers all along the racing ramp.

When the last turtle had wearily trudged across the finish line, it was the Muscular Dystrophy Research Fund which came away the big winner. Proceeds from the race, annually donated to the fund, were estimated at well over $400.

The order of finish: (Top 5)

1. American University
2. Vassar College
3. Simmons College
4. Colgate University
5. Florida State University

21. Salem College

Among colleges and universities whose turtles finished, went to sleep at the starting gate, or were cleared off the track to make way for the next heat were University of North Carolina and Greensboro College.

Classes Compete In Ugly Man Contest; Freshmen Lead With Large Contribution

Marti Ross

Diane Morton

Eleanor Lauck

Vicki Hanks

By Eloise VanSnoot MacDuFlop

In direct opposition to the recently conducted contest to find the Best Dressed Girl on campus, the freshman class is sponsoring the Ugly Man Contest.

How did it all get started? Well, the freshman class checked around campus and in a few old annuals of various schools to get new ideas for raising money for the World University Service. This contest, which is sponsored on a wide scale at both UNC and Wake Forest, was totally unique on the Salem campus. They decided to set a precedent.

Under the leadership of Lynn Frazer, each class selected a representative as its Ugly Man. (No insult intended.) The four girls are freshman Vicki Hanks, sophomore Eleanor Lauck, junior Diane Morton, and senior Marti Ross. With plentiful help (?) from their classmates, these candidates disarranged themselves in every way possible to make themselves ugly. Often the trouble they took in arriving at the final result was frightful.

For instance, Diane Morton put Vaseline in her hair. She washed her hair 21 times that night with such products as Lustre Creme, Breck for oily hair, a bottle of alcohol, one-half a bottle of Lux Liquid, and powder. After three hours of washing, she gave up and went to the beauty parlor the next day. Surprisingly, she spent only the normal time and money there, but the beautician washed her hair three times, using a quart bottle of shampoo, Silk Rinse with peroxide, and a quart of lemon juice.

In addition to styling her hair, Diane chose long underwear tops under a black taffeta street length dress with a converted square neckline and a full, gathered skirt. Her accessories included a red scarf tied around her neck, a charm bracelet worn on her ankle, a white wool shawl, and a rose in the proper place. Two tennis balls at waist level complimented her outfit. Her knee socks were worn one up, and one rolled down to offset her antique shoes—one black suede, size 4½, and one brown oxford heel, size 2½. To top off her costume, Diane wore a feather in her nose and leaves in her hair.

Eleanor Lauck chose to wear a sweatshirt-skirt ensemble consisting of a blue cotton top with a V-neck and short sleeves rolled up and a beige, red, and black plaid wool skirt. Her loose stockings hung over her black and white fruit boots. She wore her hair in wet tangles and spread Merle Norman Mircol on one side of her face, which was accented by her glasses and gap tooth.

Eleanor's costume is so versatile that she would be at home anywhere. She carried a UNC pennet in one hand and a cigarette holder in the other hand, on which she wore a black kid glove. From her right underarm she hung a brown switch.

Vicki Hanks wore a peasant's smock with a black glove coming from her V-neckline. She had a cyclops eye painted on her forehead and dark circles under her other eyes. To complete her outfit, Vicki wore four long white fangs descending from the upper lip and fashionably ratted hair.

The last contestant, Marti Ross, modeled a plaid bathrobe and no shoes. Her Bare Beige lipstick smile, generously spread, revealed three or four gaps in her upper front teeth. In her hair, styled in piglets, Marti wore a lovely white rhinestone brooch. Her ivory skin was offset by tremendous black freckles all over her face. Her seven-inch long neck was accented by several pop bead chokers and magnetic clip-on white plastic daisies on her ears.

Although the contestants outdid themselves with enthusiasm, the contest itself has gone rather slowly. Votes are made by donations of any denomination. So far the freshman class is leading with a total of $12.25. The sophomores have only fifty cents and the juniors, a nickel less. The seniors are lagging with thirteen cents donated for their candidate.

The contest will be concluded Wednesday of next week. Until then, the boxes will be by the bulletin boards of Main Hall.

Support your Ugly Man. The winner will get a free appointment to Thalhimers' beauty salon as prize.

IRS Plans Birthday Dinner

The IRS is planning the annual Birthday Dinner for Wednesday, March 17, at 6 p.m. in the refectory. Each table will be decorated to designate a specific month. Each student is requested to sit at the table of her birthday month.

All IRS council members are now working on decorations for the dinner. The Council asks that each student be sure to wear Sunday dress and heels.
