

Sign Up for Tournaments!

It's a Salem first! Your Intramural Board is sponsoring Class Tennis Tournaments this fall. That gives each and every one of you the chance to participate in a campus-wide activity to relieve your mind of academic pressures. You'll get to meet others that play this great sport and vie for top honors. All you have to do is fill out this entry form and drop it in the box in your dorm or give it to Patt Hall, tournament director, in 107 Gramley. The tentative date for the start of the tournaments is October 1, so you must have your entry form in by September 26. We will get the match pairings and dates in your boxes. Plan to join in the fun and competition today. Any questions—see me, Patt Hall. Practice up!

Incunabula Plans Events

Catherine Delbridge

If you see math problems as concrete poetry, if diagrams of DNA molecules become abstract art, or if you can write poems in German, Spanish or Greek, then you should be a part of Incunabula. If you draw, paint, write free verse, read, or just enjoy being alive, then you should be a part of Incunabula, too. Incunabula's goal is to explore your main field and how it may relate to art. The activities that have been planned will give everyone a chance to get busy and really think about some stimulating new ideas.

On Friday, September 20, Margaret Mead, a leading authority in anthropology, will speak to students. Incunabula is helping to sponsor a discussion Thursday night, September 19, in Babcock Terrace at 6:30 in order to give students and faculty a chance to discuss Dr. Mead's research and contributions to her field. This meeting will be an excellent way to gain some sort of a background for Dr. Mead's lecture.

Poets and education majors should be sure to hear Ardis Kimzey, a poet from Raleigh. She will be on campus one weekend in October to conduct a writers' workshop and to lecture on how to teach young children to write poetry. Anyone who plans to work with children should be sure to be at this workshop.

Incunabula is sponsoring two exciting contests this semester. The photography contest is for anyone who enjoys taking pictures. Any picture taken with any type of camera can be an entry. These entries will be judged by a professional photographer. The poetry contest has two categories. Structured poems, such as sonnets, will be eligible for one category, and poems written in a foreign language, such as German, French, Spanish, or even Latin will make up the other category. No free verse will be accepted for this particular contest. The deadline for both the photography and poetry contest is Friday, October 25. Please put your entries in the Incunabula box or give them to any member of the Incunabula staff.

Incunabula publishes the literary magazine once a semester. The deadline for the Fall, '74 issue is November 1. The material which makes up Incunabula should be endless. Essays, short stories, free verse, structured verse, photographs, drawings and concrete poetry are just a few of the things that Incunabula needs to become a magazine which reflects the interests of Salem students. Every field has possibilities — don't hesitate to turn in a math problem that you are proud of, or the drawing of a DNA molecule that you did in biology, or an essay about physics as an art. Give Incunabula a chance to become the excellent magazine that it ought to be. Put your mind to work.

Music Is Therapy!

Mrs. Joan Jacobowsky spent two weeks this summer studying at the University of Kansas in connection with her sabbatical. Prompted by the interest of several of her students, Mrs. Jacobowsky researched Music Therapy. The field of Music Therapy is basically a kind of special education working with the mentally retarded and emotionally disturbed in the area of music. Mrs. Jacobowsky's experience should benefit her students by providing them with knowledge of a new field of study.
