Oslo
Scholars

Donna Savoca and Katherine Fuller will be in Oslo, Norway this summer as Salem's representatives to the International Summer School. Every summer the summer school session is held at the University of Oslo and students from around the world come to study the culture, language, history, geography and business practices of Scandinavia.

The scholarship is based on a competitive basis. Students who will be a rising junior or senior may apply. They are asked to write an essay on a selected subject. Donna was chosen as the rising junior.

She plans to take courses on the History of Norway and International Studies from a Scandinavian Viewpoint. Katherine's courses include Elementary Norwegian and Norwegian Economics.

Donna and Katherine were both happy and enthusiastic over receiving the scholarships. They also plan to take advantage of having the opportunity of being abroad by doing some extra traveling.

considered that could raise the enrollment number.

Also, the population of North Carolina and the South East is reportedly increasing. Since Salem draws applicants mainly from this region more applicants could possibly result.

Beside the problem of a possible decrease in enrollment here are Salem and elsewhere, an additional problem in admissions is attrition. Mrs. Jenkins said that 20 percent of the student body transfers each year. But these transfers are not really detrimental if they are sought for the proper reasons. Mrs.

Jenkins speaks with transferring students about their reasons. She explains, "students should be made aware of what the last two years at Salem can provide for them." She believes the last years are the best. "I hate to see some of the girls miss out on the best year."

Mrs. Jenkins is confident that Salem will be able to hold its own during any possible enrollment crisis. Hopefully, Salem will be able to continue enrolling a satisfactory number of qualified applicants.

party. On Monday, the applicants will get a chance to attend two classes of their choice. Then they will hear Judy Aanstad speak on Salem's career planning program and lunch followed by a speech entitled "Why Salem" given by Martha Walker will conclude the weekend program.

This type of program has previously beneficial in presenting applicants with the academic, social and extra curricular aspects of Salem College. Certainly this years program will prove to be just as successful.
