Gallup Says We're Concerned but Confident

George Gallup Jr., president of the Gallup Polls, says the mood of America is concerned but confident. According to Gallup, "Americans are apprehensive about their future, but they're far from despondent."

Gallup spoke to about 400 people in Hanes Auditorium, Thursday, November 11 as part of the Celebrity Lecture Series of the Junior League of Winston-Salem.

New Major Offered

Students interested in graduate school, professional school, or corporate training programs, will now be able to prepare themselves through a foreign language and management major.

A new major combining study in a foreign language with preparation for careers in international relations and economics is now available to Salem students.

The program's goal is to combine a foundation in economics and management with a working knowledge of a foreign language; its culture and the history of the countries where it is spoken. The foreign languages offered are: French, Spanish, and German.

Students choosing to major in foreign language and management are encouraged to spend a semester abroad. According to Dr. Cardwell, "studying in another country would increase the student's Gallup explained that their polls usually survey a scientifically selected sample of about 1,500 people. Since 1966 their average poll predictions have been within 1 percent of the actual results.

According to Gallup, the 1982 elections were "marked by very unusual trends." This year marked an end to the long downward trend in voter participation. Gallup believes more people voted because of language proficiency and knowledge of the foreign culture."

Faculty in the modern foreign language department will help students with the selection of their foreign study program. Dr. Cardwell said, "through this combined major the department hopes to try and fulfill the needs of students who are interested in both economics and foreign languages." Cardwell believes America needs people who are proficient in a foreign language as well as business, so that business can be conducted in a foreign language.

The requirements for the foreign language and management major are:

French 105, 106, 206, French 207, 208, one course in culture
German 111, 211, 221, 222, German 207, 208
Spanish 105, 106, 206, Spanish 207, 208, Spanish 222 or 228 the number of referendums and issues which were on the ballots this year.

Gallup Polls found a moderately conservative mood in the country on social issues. But according to Gallup, that did not translate into a Republican sweep in the recent elections because voters overwhelmingly thought of their own economic concerns when casting their ballot.

Gallup said the election results were not a repudiation of Reaganomics; 56 percent polled oppose Reaganomics, 44 percent are in favor. The Gallup Poll results almost duplicate exactly the votes cast in the election. Preliminary figures indicate that Democratic candidates received 55.8 percent of all votes cast, and Republicans got 44.2 percent. Gallup believes Americans do not want to "abandon the course," but rather make a "mid-course correction."

Eighty percent of Gallup Polls' work is in market research. They are undertaking a study in 20 countries on values, and have recently completed a national opinion referendum in which people were asked to agree or disagree with 16 statements about social or political issues.

The referendum results showed clear majorities in favor of the death penalty, ERA, returning more power to states and localities, and constitutional amendments to balance the budget and permit prayer in public schools. Majorities opposed banning handgun ownership, legalizing marijuana, and using busing to achieve racial balance in schools.

"The public leans to the conservative point of view despite the Democratic tide," Gallup said. "But there's very little evidence of a move to the right. They've been there all along."

Gallup described four "distressing" trends in American society--voter apathy, increased alcohol abuse, high youth unemployment, and a far-reaching negative image of big business.

But Gallup also said there are encouraging trends in the country--decreases in bigotry in the voting booth, growing acceptance of women in politics, the growth of voluntarism, and a growing awareness of the nation's interdependence with the world.

According to Gallup, Americans are confident about the future because we've survived the past, and we believe we have the capacity and ability to solve our problems.
