

NON-ACADEMIC EDUCATION

There are so many ways in which to secure an education, even though we cannot go to college, that we would be very foolish not to take advantage of those means. The most evident are books, magazines, newspapers, the radio, motion pictures, travel, and conversation.

Books are very plentiful. They do not even have to be bought. Surely with such an abundance of information placed at our disposal we cannot object.

The magazine offers another source of information. Since some are published merely for pleasure, choices must be made.

From newspapers are obtained another great fortune. Here we receive features that, if promptly and thoughtfully read will enable us to continue to learn.

Since the radio and motion picture carry such a great variety of information, we have to assimilate and dispose of all except the things that will be of the most benefit.

From travel we broaden our knowledge of the places visited and obtain a greater learning from direct contact with the different places. Certainly cheaper traveling expenses have made this a reality.

Probably the greatest of these methods is conversation. In this way we broaden our vocabulary, obtain information, and form the habit of expressing our ideas.

From these methods at our disposal, we should carry on our education after high school even though we can't go to college. If put into practice, this will mean a great benefit in the educational world. Even though we do not go to college let us seize each opportunity and obtain as great an education as possible.

HIGH-LIGHTS IN SPORTS ATHLETES START WITH A BANG

It looks as though it is going to be a rather thrilling season for the sports fans. Our coaches, Miss Alice Carr Fields and Mr. H. B. Rogers, are working valiantly to improve the players.

When practice began at the first of the season, Miss Field's team looked rather meek, but now improvement is fast being made.

For their manager the girls reelected Louise Brantley, their last year's manager; for captain, Helen Jordan was again elected; and as co-captain, Easter Pearl Lamm was chosen.

As for the boys, they seem to like their last year's manager, Jack Farmer, whom they have again elected. Last year's captain, Lloyd "Red" Brantley, has been replaced by Albert Lamm, a faithful player of last season.

With these managers, captains, and coaches we hope to complete a successful year of "thrillers" in basketball.
