

Teachers Direct Parallel Reading

Motivated by English teachers, students select books for parallel reading with an eye for interest and general knowledge of literary works and authors.

For the ninth grade, November has been dedicated to the reading of biographies, or life as really lived. Outstanding biographies being read are "From Immigrant to In-

Johnson Designs Instrument for Class

In connection with his study, Dan Johnson, a member of the geometry class, made an instrument used for measuring diameters.

Mrs. H. A. Morse, teacher, holding her class on the school grounds, permitted Dan to teach the students how to use the instrument by measuring the diameters of trees and pipes.

STENCILS GAIN HOME

To keep stencils well preserved so that they may be used again if needed, a stencil file, composed of ten compartments, has been made by Joseph Lamm and Forest Perry under the supervision of Mr. Lemon Tapp.

Nine of the compartments will be used for the monthly issues of the Bailey Bugle; the other one is for miscellaneous work.

In order to become better acquainted with the classics, the eleventh graders are reading during the fall months the works of Dickens, Eliot, Thackeray, Barrie, Scott, and others.

SCRAP DRIVE TO BE PUSHED DURING MONTH

Since metal is still vitally important in helping win the war, November has been set aside as the month for another salvage drive.

Everyone is asked to take part by collecting and turning in either to schools or to salvage stations all old scrap metal.

All scrap donated to the schools will be sold and finances used for school purposes. Individuals wishing to sell their own scrap may do so. In any case the scrap will go for the same cause.

Curls Give Way To School Hours

School buses have assumed new duties--"drumming up" trade for Belle's beauty shop.

With spirits high, the girls after a ride to town on the school bus, walk into Belle's for a permanent. Back out they come, proudly displaying a new "hair do."

But alas, Mr. Weaver, discovering the girls' absences, thinks there is a time for all things. No more appointments during school hours.
