

Illuminating The Alumni

SHELBY JEAN EATMON

What the past editors of the Bugle have been doing since they slaved over meeting deadlines, pushing others, and serving in any capacity called upon prove illuminating material for this month's alumni column.

The first "beginning" of the Bugle was under the guidance of TRAVIS JERNIGAN, who was in Washington D.C. when last heard from.

In the school year of '40 '41 SIDNEY JONES was editor of the Bugle. Since leaving Bailey High he has served in the Navy, attended Tulane University, and is at present working in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

MARIE MORGAN, now Mrs. John Boland Simms, is a graduate of Duke University. She lives in Ocean Side, California, and has two children, Kenneth, age five, and Cathleen, age two. Her husband is a captain in the Marines.

Living in Goldsboro is SARAH M. FARMER SMITH, former editor of '42-'43. She has one child.

FLORENCE FOYNER HODGES, editor for '43-'44, has held several office jobs in Raleigh where she now lives. She is married and works at Hobby's Transfer Co.

Immediately after graduation MARGARET BROWN began working with the FBI in Washington, where she still holds a position.

Editing the Bugle in '45-'46 was BETTY D. SAUNDERS, who attended East Carolina College. She now commutes daily to her teaching job at Bunn High School.

In '46-'47 BETH BISSETTE

led the Bugle staff. She attended A. C. College, choosing teaching as a career. She began her first teaching at South Edgecombe High School in Pinetops and returned there this year. Wedding bells will be ringing for her December 20.

EVELYN POOLE is the only ex-editor who still uses the training received from working on the Bugle. After graduating at Duke University, she began teaching at Martinsville, Virginia, and has a class in journalism in the high school there.

The second male editor was BOBBY LAMM. In '50-'51 he led the Bugle staff through the school year. He is married and lives in Raleigh, where he works as manager of the producing department in the Tip Top Food Stores.

Co-editors for '51-'52 were LA RUE WINSTEAD and LOIS THIGPEN. La Rue worked for awhile in Raleigh and then decided married life was best. Lois now holds a position at Wachovia Bank in Raleigh.

MARY ANN EDWARDS, last year's editor is now attending A.C. College in Wilson, hoping to major in math and minor in English. PEGGY LILES is this year's editor, attempting to uphold the tradition of these past editors.

CHRISTMAS TREES

— for — SALE!

$1.50-UP

Place orders for special sized trees

EARLY

A. H.
FARMERS

Bailey, N.C.

For Quality

Flowers

FROM

HILLSIDE FLORIST

See Mrs. Paul Lamm

Bailey, North Carolina

Phone 3206