

Illuminating The Alumni ----- S. EATMON

BOYS ATTENDANCE HIGH

Teachers, take heart. Yours may be the "foot-prints on the sands of time" that inspired the alumni in this month's column to choose teaching as their career.

English is the subject most of these alumni teach.

At West Edgecombe, Beth Bissette Frazier is teaching English and math.

Evelyn Poole, in Martinsville, Virginia, chose English as the one subject she would like to help high school students with.

East Tennessee State Teachers College, Johnson City, Tennessee, is the home and "teaching center" of Ambrose Manning.

There are a number of coaches among this month's alumni.

Coaching at Pine Level this year is Bobby Stott.

The Methodist Orphanage in Raleigh lays claim to James Brown and his "little family."

Former alumnus of BHS, Bobby Vick, selected Bunn as the "school of his choice" to instruct the boys in agriculture.

Principal of Mt. Pleasant School is Norman Petterson, who came back to his childhood school to teach.

Ralph Farmer is the business administrator of Berry College in Georgia and is teaching Money and Banking, Accounting, and Business Law.

Also at Bunn teaching science is Betty Doris Saunders.

Ruth Farmer Perry is home economics supervisor at

Dunn this year.

Rock Ridge has been Cecil Brantley's teaching base since graduation. He is one of the agricultural teachers there.

Al Williams, not desiring to leave the Carolinas, is teaching English in South Carolina.

Eighth grade teacher at Whiteville is Martin Liles. Martin says this is the age level that boys need the most sympathetic understanding.

Not very far from her home, Marjorie Brown Finch, is teaching at Stanhope.

"To better farming" by teaching modern means of agriculture, Paul Dew decided upon this subject for his teaching career.

J. C. Lamm is teaching, but we were unable to locate his school or the one in which Florence Pace Creech is a teacher.

Sallie Lou Perry Stott and Marks Underwood did teach but have decided upon other vocations.

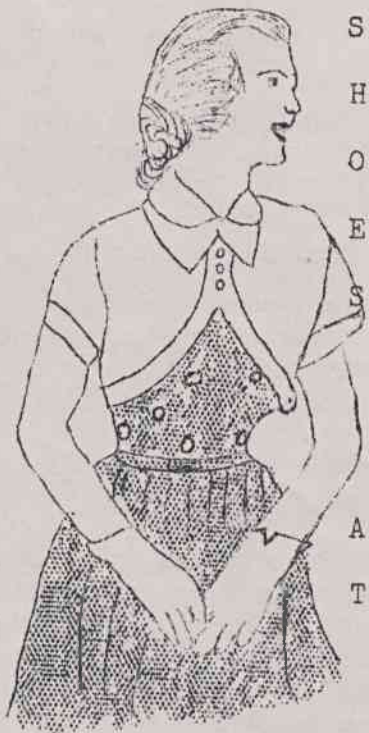

Tonight PTA will elect its new officers for next year.

The senior boys' attendance record for the year is better than the girls'.

Building supervisor, Opie Brantley said Bailey students showed "more respect to the carpenters than any other students contacted"
