

Watch Bus Passengers For Interest

Have you ever watched people on a bus? You probably have something better to do, but you might try it sometimes. It can be pretty interesting.

For instance, there is usually on a bus a general pest whose chief goal in life is to see how obnoxious he can be. He travels alone for obvious reasons but it doesn't take him long to strike up an acquaintance with the person unfortunate enough to be seated beside him.

The Pest Present

His voice booms above every other one on the bus and he can nearly always be heard laughing. Everything he hears is hilariously funny and he will slap his thighs and roar at the drop of a hat. Sometimes, he likes to sit behind the driver and carry on a one-sided conversation with him. He will even go so far as to heartily slap the driver on the back. This causes a mild form of hysteria from some of the other passengers, especially if it occurs near a dangerous intersection or when crossing a narrow bridge. It is not unusual to see the section above the driver's collar begin to be fringed with dread.

The Country Woman

There is inevitably a woman from the country on the bus. Women from the country must like to ride buses. Anyway, it's easy to tell where she is from. This type usually carries along a little snack to munch on while riding. If you are sitting beside her, she will be only too glad to tell you about the nice new cow Uncle Henry and Aunt Penelope just bought, or how Jeanie is making out with her canning. When she runs out of local news (you have begun to wonder if she ever will) she begins telling you about her rheumatism and how it always acts up just before it is going to rain. She always knows when it is going to rain that way. A regular weather bureau, she is.

She's Bored

Then, there's the bored woman of the world who has condescended to ride a public bus. She isn't in the habit of riding this way but her car is in the shop. She has a distant look on her face and it is obvious that she is not indulging in idle day-dreaming.

Old Hi News Jokes Given

(By Sara Cobb)

These jokes appeared in the "Hi News" several years back just about the time that I was coming over to G. H. S. for the first time as a sub-freshman.

I was looking over some of the old "Hi News" when I happened to see them. Hope you enjoy them as much as I did.

"Young man," said the father, "When Lincoln was your age he was earning his own living."

"And when he was your age," said the son, "He was President."

Math Prof.: If two is duplicated, three is triplicated, four is quadruplicated five is quintuplicated, six is sexticated, seven is sesticated, and eight is sisticated, what is nine?

Student: Complicated.

Before the next one we quote: "Better late than never."

Teacher: Billy, what is the revival of learning?

Student: Just before exams.

Jane: Did you get any relief when you went to the dentist?

Bobby: Yeah, the dentist wasn't there.

Man (eating in a restaurant): What kind of pie is this?

Waitress: What does it taste like?

Man: Glue.

Waitresses: It's peach; the apple tasted like putty.

She is no doubt contemplating the theory of relativity or musing on nuclear fission. It is evident that she is much more refined and cultured than anyone else on the bus. There is one advantage in being seated with this type, though. She won't bore you with talk. Why, she'll even make you feel that you aren't there at all.

Teen-Agers Ride Too

Teen-agers take to the trailways, too. You can see two young girls who are evidently discussing something of importance. They throw sly glances to the boys across the aisle every now and then and they find an endless source of amusement from other passengers on the bus. They look at the woman in the smartly-tailored suit, with the matching hat and pat their heads as though they had a hat on it and make a play of smoothing their skirts as they saw the bored woman do. If they have nothing better to do, they can always entertain themselves by giggling. There's always someone who Naughty! Naughty!

Are you one of the many students who are guilty of using the terrace instead of the steps each day? It is quite plain that the wor put on the terraces by Dick Griswold is being ruined by such thoughtlessness as is exhibited above.

meant to get off back there and just forgot to pull the cord. If it's a female, she may yell at the driver, "Stop, stop! I was supposed to get off back there." When he comes to a stop, she gives him a reproachful look while leaving because it was obviously his fault that she didn't get off in time. Bus drivers are such nuisances anyway. You'd think they'd be more courteous. Well, there is an endless variety of types on buses. This is only a few of them. Next time you take a trip by bus or train, take a look for yourself. Who knows You may be one of them.

When I mix a compound
It explodes all around.
Is that, my dear Watson, elementary?
I may not be omniscient
Sometimes I'm quite inefficient.
Having met my Waterloo
At the early age of two
My perspicacity is now insufficient.
It's been a long toil and wait
And this year I graduate.
That night in June
(And it will come soon)
Will be one to commemorate.

Senior Reviews Life In Rhyme

When I was a young girl of eleven
I was far from seventh heaven.
My face was all speckled
With dozens of freckles,
But now there are just six or seven.
When I reached the age of thirteen
I was clumsy and often quite mean.
I felt like a dope and a ghou.
The subject of algebra
Gave me nostalgia.
I was the perennial dunce on a stool.
To me, the subject of chemistry
Is indeed, a very deep mystery.
Faces I'd make
And, oh, goodness sakes,
A worst thing you never have seen.
At fifteen, I began to dream
Of dances and parties, it seemed.
I haven't been yet;
A date I can't get
At a party, I'm yet to be seen.
When I first started to high school
