

Food, Hi-Lite Of Home Ec.

"Hm, that sure smells good!" was the remark made by Erlene Valentine as she watched Wilma Nelms take an appetizing dish out of the stove.

During the course of first semester home economics each student has to cook many different kinds of food. These pupils are usually divided in groups of five and work in the various kitchen units, preparing different dishes. When they complete this particular part of the course they have cooked all three meals.

Always after the cooking and eating a meal, there comes the tedious task of washing the dishes. Pat Alexander and Jo Ann Burns don't mind this job now, since it's left up entirely to the new electric dishwasher. All they have to do is put the dishes in and take them out.

Earlier this year, the students had discussion groups on how they can improve their personal appearance and how to make themselves more attractive.

The home-ec department has an attractive bulletin board and the display is changed weekly. All the subjects pertain to homemaking in its various aspects.

Seniors Plan Future; Applications Sent Out To Colleges In State

Many students who are planning to go off to college this next year have put in their applications for the various scholarships offered.

So far this year there has been a representative from the Woman's College of U. N. C. and from Sullins College. These representatives have talked to the girls who hope to attend these colleges next fall and have given them information concerning applications as well as financial matters.

Students of the senior class have also been sending for catalogs from the various schools of their choice. Most students have at least two schools that they would like to attend next year.

As the first semester passes, more representatives from the different colleges will come to talk to the students about the qualifications they must have in order to enter. They will give these students a general outline of what they will be expected to do their first year and what college life is like.

By second semester most of the seniors will have sent their applications in to the selected colleges. Also many will be taking tests and entrance exams which are required by the colleges. Students will be notified as soon as possible whether they are accepted.

Murder Committed In Room 110; Student Plays Yo-Yo With Victim

A dreadful, horrible, frightening thing happened in room 110 last Wednesday. A murder was committed and a student actually played yo-yo with the victim. But let me start at the beginning...

It was a cool crisp day and the fourth period journalism students were full of pep and energy. Some were lying half way on top of their desks and some were sitting at a 165 degree angle. The teacher was sitting at her desk giving them facts about feature stories. That's all, just the facts. Nothing but the facts. The facts are what count, you know.

Girl Is Speechless!
Suddenly a girl gasped and started pointing violently into the air. Her voice left her speechless. The teacher looked up and she too started pointing into the air, unable to utter a word. They had seen what was about to happen. The murderer was descending quietly upon his victim, Charles Bateman.

Charles turned and looked around him fearfully. He knew by the way the students were acting that something was about to happen to him. Then he looked up, and a malicious grin crossed his face. The tables were turned now. He picked up an object from his desk and began to tease his foe by punching him with it. But his enemy came down even more swiftly by his self-made rope.

Charles Plays Yo-Yo

Charles jumped up and broke the rope, and because he was a bigger man than his foe, took the rope with his victim still hanging on the end, over to the trash can and started playing yo-yo with him. After he tired of the game, he dropped the rope and all into the trash can. The victim—a spider on his web!

Is It Alive?

Students wandered into Miss Boice's fifth period art class during the week before the National Education Week Parade and came out with questions something like this: What is it? Is it alive? Did it come from Mars? Where is the rest of it?

No, they weren't talking about anything alive, even though it looked it. These students were talking about a giant hand, representing the hand of a teacher, constructed for one of the parade floats and sponsored by the local educational units. Over four yards of forty-inch wide went into the huge project. A small wood frame came wire and next the paper and paint.

In the giant hand were a small boy and girl representing school children. They, too, were made of wire and paper. After the hand was completed, letter he float were painted to designate its meaning.

No student could complain of boredom while this project was under way. Miss Boice says, "The job was rather messy but a lot of fun."

ECC Class Visits In Local School

"One thing about it, E. C.'s got some cute girls," was the opinion of the boys after East Carolina's Teaching Method's class observed in the high school classes November 12.

One of the visiting students said that "Rocky Mount Senior High was selected by the majority vote of the class." "We are all greatly impressed with the school and the students. It's wonderful to see how well the students are accepting and using this new school," she added.

This group of students were observing in all fields of teaching in order to discover the methods of teaching and the class conditions in a modern high school.

Find Your Name

Are you one of the lucky students? You never can tell! All you have to do is read carefully all the ads in this issue of the paper and see if you are lucky enough to have had your name printed some where in the ads! Just think, having your name advertised before the many readers of the paper!

This new feature is an idea of the staff, the purpose being to arouse interest among the students in reading the ads and to also give different students a chance to have their names in the paper.

If you were not one of the lucky students this time, keep looking in future issues. You never can tell! You may be a lucky one, too.
