Snakes, 'Black Books' Put

Variety in Exchange Column

by Carol Threatt

Snakes, "little black books", mistletoe, and poems provide an unusual variety for the Exchange Column this month.
How do these things figure in the exchange papers? Well, three students at New Hanover High School in Wilmington collect some unusual items for hobbies. George Wheelis has a collection of 13 snakes (of all things!) which include rattle-snakes, copperheads and water snakes. Many peopl collect records (that's not so different), but Robert Hatch has different), but Robert Hatch has a collection of approximately 700 records (that's unusal, I'd say records (that's unusal, I'd say, wouldn't you?) consisting of every wouldn't you?) consisting of ever'y type of music from jazz to sym type of music from jazz to sym phony. An amazing hobby of Jane Bond is a collection of dates in "little black book". This. she say.s helps her remember when certain things are to be dene. Not a bad idea, huh?

Kissing Under Mistletoe? An article in The Rambler from Norwood High School reminds u of the origin of "kissing under mistletoe". This custom date back to ancient Gaul and Britain and was venerated by the pre Christian religious society of Druids. It was gathered during the celebration of winter soltice and was considered an emblem of was considered an embiem of peace and good forture. When enemies met underneath, they emenemies met underneath, they em braced, thus the custom of kiss Ing under the mistletoe. (How many of you knew this joyful tradition had such a beginning?
