

WHO'S WHO

VIRGINIA STONE

KENNETH BROOKS

One of the most popular and attractive girls in high school is Virginia Stone, editor of the Full Moon.

For the past two years "Stoney" has been a member of the Journalistic club and on the staff of the paper. She is the newly elected president of the Literary Section and last year was president of the Business Section.

It is interesting to know that Virginia has a collection of three hundred original short stories. She also collects and enlarges caricatures of famous people. "These are the nearest things I have to a hobby," she said. As for sports, "Stoney" prefers football, swimming, and golf.

Virginia isn't sure where she is going after graduation, but she plans to major in journalism. Because of her originality, ability, and interest in writing, she will we predict, achieve success in her chosen field.

"NUMBER, PLEASE"

Your reporter listened in while students were practicing the art of telephone conversation. "Hello," called A. P. Hubbard, (Dr. Vancken) supposedly a dentist: "Hello, Doc! I have some teeth hurting me. Can you tell me sup'in I can get to keep 'em from botting me?" A. P., "Sure, put alcohol on 'em!"

Kenneth Brooks picked up the phone. "Hello," he remarked: "Say, somebody's cut this wire! It's about to fall apart!"

The following conversation was carried on by "Buck," a ring salesman, and Oron, a representative of the graduating class:

Oron: "The graduating class is going to leave and we want some rings."
 "Buck": "What kind you want?"
 Oron: "What kind you have?"
 "Buck": "Bout any kind."
 Oron: "We want one with a

Going North With Gehring And Canipe

Upon interviewing Mr. Canipe and Mr. Gehring it was found that they took a most enjoyable trip to New York this summer.

Mr. Gehring began, "We took the train and went up the river to Virginia," and Mr. Canipe interrupted, "The scenery was as pretty as the view up the river on a hot night," continued Mr. Gehring, "we were in the one and only St. Louis Hotel." It was on the night he added with a wink at Mr. Canipe, "for the residents of St. Louis, for the residents of St. Louis to hear a real southern talk."

After spending three days in St. Clair, the travelers visited New York. "When we got to New York," said Mr. Gehring, "we were the proverbial country hicks. The buildings seemed much taller to me than they did to Mr. Canipe. I wonder why?" We wanted to see the entire city in two hours, and almost did."

Here Mr. Canipe picked up the thread. "We were walking along Broadway staring, when a sight-seeing guide asked if we wouldn't like to see the city. We agreed to do so and were taken to a little side street off Broadway. The guide collected our money and left. After about half an hour's wait, we decided that we had been jipped out of our money and were ready to leave when a large bus drove up and our man came back. We took a taxi and really saw New York."

"They stopped at the Astor Hotel—long enough to rest in the easy chairs and drop a few cigarette ashes on 'em." "Then we went to a smaller hotel where would suit a school teacher's salary," explained Mr. Gehring.

"After riding the express elevator in Rockefeller Center, both of us decided that we'd never suicide by jumping," was Coach comment.

"We took in Atlantic City a week before the Bathing and Beach Contest, and although we would have liked very much to stay, we decided it was best not to," Mr. Gehring said.

"In Philadelphia, we had to take a subway, which was quite a thrill," they continued. "Not knowing which to take they tossed a coin and luckily got on the right one!"

They stopped at Gettysburg, Battle-Grand on the way home. "Due to the fact that a guide cost $2.50 we decided best to buy a little booklet with the entire story in for fifty cents," they said. While Mr. Canipe drove around the grounds Mr. Gehring sat in the car and read the history of Gettysburg.

Mr. Gehring ended with the remark, "We had a grand trip and hope to go again," while Mr. Canipe added, "I like the North and

Twelfth Grade Has Versatile Members

There are thirty-seven twelfth graders this year. Of that number six are from out of town, four are last year's graduates, and three are graduates of '37.

The out-of-towners are Delmar Almond, Eddy; Menefer Bennett, Newark; Marshall Boyce, High Rock; C. B. Clark, Badin; Bill Hough, New London; and Bonnie Hayes, McCubbin, Salisbury.

Douglas Crawford, S. C. Sprinkle, Mary E. Dyer, and Lorene are enrolled after graduation in '38. Gerald Crisco, Elberta Ragsdale, and Frank Deese of Salisbury, are enrolled.

The subjects that seem most popular with the twelfth graders are creative writing, business English, chemistry and advanced commercial courses.

This class, the smallest in school, has already become noted for its musical talents. C. B. Efrid, Bill Nye, Clara Shankle and Douglas Cranford compose a popular quartet. C. B. Efrid, after studying in Charlotte during the summer, is more than ever a Rubinfest with his violin. Then there are O. D. Shoo with his guitar and Bill Hough with his violin. Too, there are several outstanding dramatic talents in the class.

Did you know that this class claims the tallest boy in school, Norman Clark, standing six feet five, and C. B. Clark, the smallest senior, standing five feet three. This class can also boast of having some of the fastest, though smallest, football stars—"Buck" Mahaffey, the Gallego, "Hod" Shankle, and C. B. Clark. So you see, the new twelfth grade, although it is the smallest, holds the record for being the most talented and versatile class in high school.

Kenneth Brooks, business manager of the Full Moon last two years, has become known for his dependability. His versatile interests and pleasing personality make him one of the most outstanding boys in school. For three years he has been an active member of the Dramatic and Journalistic clubs.

His hobbies are riding his motor-bike, raising money to finance the Full Moon, and making and flying gas model airplanes. After winning fourth place in the South Eastern model airplane contest last summer, he plans to go to Detroit to compete with the national contestants next year. An experienced photographer, he owns a still and a motion picture camera. "Ken" likes Charlie McCarthy, Don Ameche, Donald Duck, Sabatini's books, football, swimming, and apple pie!

After graduation, Kenneth plans to enter Georgia Tech to study aeronautical engineering.
