Welcome sweet springtime, with its invigorating breezes and seersucker suits.

Who says Ag students aren't tea hounds?

Wake Forest B. Y. P. U. social, the event of the season!

We were on the point of feeling rather slighted since our Junior-Senior Banquet was so conspicuously absent from the columns of our rival publication, but we are consoled when we think that they can hardly be expected to know much about it since none of them attended the affair.

Four more weeks—then rest to the weary.

The advent of hot weather is apparently being accompanied by a severe epidemic of spring fever. Either that or the annual pre-exam flood of work is taking all the time of all the students, judging from the great variety of excuses we have received concerning various write-ups which failed to appear.

We earnestly hope that our neighbor college will soon obtain the much-wished-for sidewalks.

Meredith was very fortunate in having two representatives at the Southern Association of Student Government Presidents which met at Tallahassee, Florida during the past week. Our delegates were Elsie Elkins and Winnie Rickett.

The chapel talk by Major Morgan was something different in the line of exhortation. We trust that his enthusiasm will prove contagious.

Apropos of Sunday criticisms which have come to our ears concerning the way the girls conduct themselves on the campus, we might remark that we are so concerned with our own affairs that we have little time to worry about the impression we make on some of our critics.

The fact that almost the whole student body attended the performance of Macbeth augurs well for the intellectual and cultural caliber of our college and proves that the former appearances of Mantelle and his company have not been as caviare to the multitude. The sleep-walking scene of Lady Macbeth, in the last play had extraordinary merit; in fact the performance was remarkable chiefly on account of Genevieve Hamper instead of Mantelle, although he was undeniably great.

Billy Sunday asserts that girls have a right to dress just as they please, to bob their hair if they want to, and to use just as much paint as they think necessary. By saying this he shows that he is not nearly so intolerant and narrow-minded as a great many others of his sex. It looks as if men ought to realize that lecturing to or about the perversity of women is rather worse than in vain, since sensible girls do not paint too much nor bob their hair if it is not becoming or convenient, and those who are not sensible will hardly take kindly to such friendly suggestions as we have heard thrown out.

The Phi play was a success from every point of view. The cast was well selected, each girl, seeming so fitted for her part that it might have been written for her. Dr. Horton was responsible in a large measure for the success of the play. The Phi Society extend to him their thanks and appreciation.

A year after leaving college George married Betty, the most wonderful girl in the world, and settled down to a happy life. They had a pretty little cottage in a suburb which shamed the literature of the Los Angeles real estate men. Most of the mornings were sunny as George walked to the station to catch the 8:30 train. (He had banker's hours.) No pestiferous neighbors dropped around in the evenings just as they were about to get Cincinnati on their two-tube set. George had a prosperous business. Betty was happy in cooking wonderful meals and keeping house for him, and life was a sweet summer dream.

Sounds like a pack of assorted lies, doesn't it? Well, it is, but wouldn't it make a corking plot for a movie?

FAMOUS LETTERS OF FAMOUS PEOPLE

School, Monday Night
 Dearest Dada:

If this weather doesn't change, I'm afraid that I shall commit suicide, homicide, inside, and outside! I only know of one thing hotter.

The play I wrote you about was given Saturday night, and it was awfully good. State, Carolina, and Wake Forest certainly did their best to make a man out of one girl. She had on a Carolina belt, bounded on the North by Wake Forest trousers and sox, and on the South by a State shirt and pipe, the latter of which lent atmosphere not only figuratively, but literally.

Do you remember that little Sophomore Jackie Snyder, that you met last summer? Well, he's been shipped from Wake Forest for cheating. It seems that on an anatomy test they asked how many vertebrae there were, and poor Jackie was caught rubbing his back.

You know, in spite of all the slams they give us college girls, I've reached the conclusion that we're like angels in at least one respect. We never have an earthy thing to wear!

The man that wrote "in the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns"—was right. But he missed the direction, 'cause I've discovered that it turns merely to base-ball and track-meets, and as for love—well, in their spare moments, they may call you up if 9181 isn't busy.

A remark I overheard the other day tempts me to challenge State College to an "As You Are" week-end. In return for leaving off our paint and powder, they should leave off razors and stacomb! Don't you think it would be fifty-fifty?

I wrote Mama that I was passing my work with ease and she wrote back and asked me to try to do better, because E's were conditions when she was here.

I must stop now, and write some for the Twig. It seems that everybody knows lots that's happened till you ask 'em to write it up—and then—they know everything else but!

Anyway, I've broken my New Year's resolution that I made April Fools Day, and fallen in love all over again—I'll tell you all about it next time.

Lots of love,

PINKIE.

P. S. I've decided to withdraw my challenge, cause my latest has a standing date for the week-ends and the sand-papered effect wouldn't go!
