gentlemen should come unprepared, we are asked to call attention to the fact that we said reservations were being made, not that tickets were being bought. Therefore, this word of advice, came properly prepared, as it would be an almost impossible task for the entertaining publications to purchase 150 tickets at $2 per.

H. L. HESTER DUKE UNIVERSITY

a writer, but he's a debater, too. If you can't take our word for it just try a little debating with him. You will find he's mighty hard to beat. He has a brain that works all the time and a vocabulary that has never been exhausted.

Conceited? Decidedly not! Perhaps he has never realized how much he has accomplished. But Jerry is the kind of boy that honor makes humble.

If we were to elaborate on his honors you might grow weary before we finished. He's a Duke man and he's dyed in true blue and white—the colors of his Alma Mater. No matter what he has meant to Duke or to the town from which he came, we can say with those who know him that he's a real Southern gentleman. What better could we say of any one? He is "just Jerry" on the campus, off the campus, or no matter where he happens to be. He has already proven that he is most capable.

We feel that the Association could not have gotten a better president. His lofty ideals have won our admiration and respect. He's a fellow that believes in and practices real sportsmanship. Jerry is just another advocate of that age old theory that runs something like this—"smile and the world smiles with you!" To be sure he's a great ole boy but after all he's just a "regular fellow."

On Wednesday afternoon, October the twelfth, from three-thirty to five o'clock, the faculty of St. Mary's School entertained with an "At Home." In the receiving line were Dr. and Mrs. Way, Bishop and Mrs. Chesire and the faculty of St. Mary's. The guests included friends and Alumnae of the school, the members of the faculties of Meredith and Peace, and the wives of the professors of State College. During the afternoon members of the senior class served dainty refreshments.

Although the weather was very unfavorable, a goodly number of the guests invited enjoyed a delightful afternoon.
