Religious Education School Added to Seminary

A new door of opportunity for men and women preparing for non-pastoral Christian ministries has opened at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky.

With the opening of Southern Seminary's newly created School of Religious Education, which will begin its first session in September, specialized courses will be offered men and women preparing for such positions as educational director, worker with age groups, Baptist Student Union secretary, teacher, etc.

Basic biblical and theological courses will be taken in the School of Theology and courses in music will be available in the School of Church Music, providing the training required for the combination positions of education-music director. Adjacent to the campus is the Carver School of Missions and Social Work, with classes open to religious education students.

The demand for qualified young men and women in this field far exceeds the supply, according to Dr. G. S. Dobbins, dean of the School of Religious Education.

DR. PRICE TO SPEAK

The Colton English Club will hear Dr. Helen Price, retired former head of the Ancient Languages Department, as its annual dinner meeting on May 7. Dr. Price will speak about her stay in Australia.

young Negro woman, a singer who was then performing in basements, and sent her to Europe. Today the world knows her as Marian Anderson.

"Not that we had anything to do with Marian Anderson," Dr. Alexander added quickly. "It was God who backed Marian Anderson. However, we do feel that our sending her to Europe where she gained her reputation initiated a career that otherwise would have been delayed. But Marian Anderson would have gotten it, even if she had starved in the process."

Dr. Alexander, a slight, white-haired educator, personifies the retired man who has spent his life usefully and well. "Life has been fun," he concluded. "I wouldn't have been happy in any other kind of work."
