Mr. Harry K. Dorsett, Education Professor Is Psychologist, Actor, and Avid Golfer

By MILLIE PEARCE

As a person vitally interested in the emotional well-being of children, Harry K. Dorsett, a member of the department of education, spends one afternoon a week and extra time during holidays and vacations at the Wake County Mental Health Center in Raleigh. He began his work as a clinical psychologist at the mental health clinic twenty

Others who influenced his ideas were Joseph Peterson, who taught psychology at George Peabody College in Nashville, one of the outstanding teachers' schools in the South. Also Mr. Dorsett added that he had taken a course under Bunyan Yates Tyner, who was head of the Meredith department of education for approximately twenty-five years. He also studied with Harry Emerson Fosdick at the Union Theological Seminary in New York City.

Dramatic Interests

In addition to working at the mental health clinic and teaching students at Meredith to understand children, Mr. Dorsett also professes a life long interest in the theater. He recalls that his grandfather took him to see his first play when he was a youngster. Tent shows, which were presented across the street from his home in Siler City, gave him the chance to see numerous traveling theatrical groups. While a student at Wake Forest College, he came to Raleigh for many plays. The professor also saw plays while a graduate student at Columbia University in New York City.

The professor explained that his family loves to attend Little League games and that they always fit their summer vacations to the Little League schedule in order not to miss any of the games. Mr. Dorsett also explained that his family always sings on trips.

Mr. Dorsett Enjoys Golf

On trips to the golf course, Mr. Dorsett frequently takes the children, although he admits that they are more interested in the drinks and hot dogs they will receive than in the game of golf. A lover of golf, Mr. Dorsett said he does not have time to play as much golf now as he did formerly. Though the children do not seem to share his interest in golf at present, Mr. Dorsett stated, "Don't try to force interests on children. You should fit into the interests of the child and what he wants to do.

Fashion Features

Decked in the season's gayest colors, autumn leaves flutter through the air to nestle close to the earth.

The annual fall of the leaves is often accompanied by the fall of a sudden shower, drowning everything from ghosts and goblins to Meredith College shoppers.

Ever had one of these unexpected showers catch you downtown while your umbrella napped cozily in your closet at school? How disconcerting, but how pleasant it is if the rain catches you in Mac Joseph's. Helen Daniel, recently elected Queen of May, hasn't stopped raving about her latest rainy day special from Joseph's.

An oyster white raincoat, elegant enough for any queen was Helen's purchase. Having the "fog look" with the welt back, tailored stitching, and ivy league buttons, Helen's new coat is indeed something to rave about at $22.98.

Can't believe it? Go in Mac Joseph's and look for yourself; the price is indeed a Halloween treat. In case you're interested in another color, the coat also comes in an olive green shade.

Ellen McPhaul, who helped Helen pick out her coat, was equally excited about Mac

Joseph's selection of car coats.

Ellen's favorite was a sporty gray and red plaid coat, featuring the new stocking sleeve. The outside sleeve of the coat is full and casual looking but underneath is a snugly fitting stocking sleeve to keep you warm all winter long. The knit collar and cuffs give just the right touch to make this coat one that can be worn from town to campus. Ellen tells us that Mac Joseph's also has the traditional "pea" coats in solid wool.

With the weather turning cooler daily, don't wait for the first frost to catch you in need of a warm wrap. Stop by Mac Joseph's on your next trip downtown or to Cameron Village. You'll be just as excited as Helen and Ellen!
