

Students choose salty air and sand for Spring Break vacation

by Kim Allen, News Editor

As the time for Spring Break approaches, many students from Meredith College are planning trips.

Meredith is offering two trips. One of them, The Imperial Cities Tour, which goes to Morocco, includes stops at Casablanca, Fez, Rabat, Marrakech, and other cities. The trip is March 1-8 and the cost is $895 per participant.

The other trip is a flight to Bermuda March 2-9. The trip is especially for college students and the cost is $619.

Many students, however, have decided to take their own trips this Spring. The ever-famous trip to Florida is again a major attraction for college students. This year, however, the students may experience problems with celebrating Spring Break.

A new law has been passed in Florida stating that there is to be no public drinking. Any persons found with alcoholic beverages by the police will have to pour the drink out.

When freshman Stefanie Stokely was asked how she felt about the law and how it would affect her trip, she replied, "I think that as long as you're of the legal drinking age and the alcoholic beverage is concealed, then you should be allowed to drink in public. As for its effect on me, if the law is strictly enforced, I will not risk getting arrested by a few drinks."

When Megan Long, a freshman, was asked why she chose Florida as the place to spend her Spring Break, she said, "I need a vacation."

Many students, however, plan to use the week to rest up from school. Angie Stroud, a sophomore, explains, "I am going home to take care of some menial tasks."
