that these tests were not being done any longer; at the same time she was filming these tests for the Compassion Campaign.

Gillette has since moved its testing operation to an undisclosed independent laboratory, where it pays outside contractors to blind and poison animals with its products.

Magram told the Herald that these tests are not required by any law and they offer no protection to you, the consumer. Companies who perform product testing on animals are doing so to protect themselves in the event of a consumer lawsuit.

What can you do to help? Write Gillette's Chief Executive Officer, Colman Mockler, at The Gillette Company, Prudential Tower Building, Boston, MA 02199 and tell him whether you plan to buy Gillette products in the future. Return Gillette products and demand a refund. Since this case was publicized, Gillette has changed its policy to require "product performance dissatisfaction."

Compassionate consumers are telling Gillette that after hearing of its abuse of animals, they reevaluated the product's performance and found it unsatisfactory. Get involved in Meredith's SETA, chaired by Catherine Shaw. Check the label of the products you buy before making a purchase.

What's Hot for Halloween

by Julia Haskett

A visit to Raleigh Creative Costumes at 616 St. Mary's Street is like stepping into a closet full of fantasy. Ms. Douglas Haas, owner of the 17-year-old establishment, has seen many Halloweens come and go and has several tips for hot costumes this year.

"Nuns, priests, and witches are popular this year," Haas said. "Old South costumes are big, too, with the girls dressed as southern belles and the men wearing Confederate uniforms."

Flappers, clowns and anything with glitz are sure to be seen at Halloween get-togethers this Wednesday night. Ms. Haas offered flappers and gangsters as a fashionable couple costume.

Creative Costumes carries a varied assortment of accessories: make-up, wigs, temporary hair color, masks, sparkly eyelashes, stockings, and anything with glitter and sequins.

Ready-made costumes such as Dorothy and other Wizard of Oz characters, mermaids, turtles, bunnies, skeletons and snakes can be had for $20 and up.

Rental costumes are available from $20; most average $25-$35.

On Saturday, Creative Costumes was jammed with people getting an early start on the big night. Even though most costume shops are well stocked this time of year, Ms. Haas suggested that it's better not to wait until the last minute to get started on your Halloween disguise.
