milk. I've fed them leftover watermelon rinds from afternoon picnics and felt their rough tongues on my fingers. I've dusted them with powder to keep summer flies away. And I've seen that they can be affectionate, loving animals — animals that don't deserve to be treated cruelly and do deserve to live in their natural habitat.

My request is simple. Before you purchase veal in the grocery store or order it at that Italian restaurant, take a few seconds to read the label or question your waiter to find out if the veal was raised anemia-free. If it wasn't, pass it up. Send the signal to the veal producers that inhumane treatment of calves doesn't pay.

loving dearly the two homosexuals I am very close to, it saddens me to have to see the ignorance and closed-mindedness of people whom they to come across everyday of their lives. It's pretty pathetic and I try not to associate myself with these people.

Candace R. Hagan
Residence Life Director encourages students to complete surveys

On behalf of the entire Residence Life Staff, I would like to express my appreciation to each student who participated in our Student Opinion Survey during hall meetings last week. We are currently in the process of tallying the results of the survey, and in the coming weeks we hope to share with you the information that we have gathered.

As students here at Meredith you have very strong opinions about a number of issues on campus from food in the dining hall to 7 p.m. doors to male visitation. This survey allowed us to hear those opinions and to have that information readily available as we plan for the future. Your input is important to us and will make a difference in the way we look to the future of residence life at Meredith.

I would encourage our commuting students to complete similar surveys that they recently received in the mail and to return them to the Office of the Dean of Students. Please don't let this opportunity to be heard pass you by.

Again, to all of you who completed surveys, we thank you.

Senior describes Meredith experience

It is hard for me to believe that four years ago next month, I wandered into Anne Dahle's office seeking information about Meredith's

WINGS program. Before I left, I was enrolled for summer school.

As I look back on that day in March, I remember that it was a typical spring day: the sun warming, renewing the earth after the dead of winter. I remember the empathy on Anne's face., The reflection of myself in her eyes, and the hand that she extended as we walked toward the big hall and registered.

I was a newly divorced mother of two. The children lived away. My time was empty., Why did I even think about school? I was afraid that all of the girls would be smarter than me. But I soon learned that we were each on our own journey and that we needed each other to succeed.

I met professors who challenged my intellect, emotions, and spirituality. I learned to be comfortable with my thoughts and to respect the restless quiet when issues could not be brought to rest. I learned to love myself and have never been more content.

I can never give back to this college, and especially to the WINGS program, as much as Anne Dahle gave to me in those brief moments that marked the beginning of my second life in the spring of 1989.

As I prepare to graduate, I would like for all of the young women that I have met and studied with to know that I appreciate them. Their thoughts and their values were inspiring and hopeful. And to Anne, thank you for holding my hand that day. The seeds of self-fulfillment were planted by you.

I remember one last thing. I cried that day. The tears were tears of joy coming from deep within myself. And as each tear fell, it watered the seeds. I will never be the same again.

Fondly, and withutmost respect for you, Anne, my fellow classmates, and to each of my professors, I remain grateful for all of you.
