Group studies impact of re-entries

by Amity Brown

A group formed to assess the re-entry program at Meredith College recently released the findings of a study which began in the fall of 1991.

According to the report submitted by the Continuing Education Advisory Committee, the group focused on "the internal operations of the [re-entry] program as it serves nontraditional-age students and the impact of this program on the college as a whole."

During the 1991-92 academic year, 21 percent of Meredith undergraduates were re-entires, 14 percent of them full-time students.

According to the report, the committee gathered information through "samplings of opinion from the Meredith community, including students, faculty and administration, current literature on adult education and conversations with those heading re-entry programs at institutions similar to Meredith." As a result of the study the committee recommended adjustments be made in instructors' dealings with mixed-age classes, students' attitudes toward each other and services offered to commuting students.

"We wanted to provide the best service for all students," said Anne Dahle of Continuing Education.

While the committee studied the program in a variety of ways, it based much of its information on a survey distributed to traditional-age sophomores and seniors and to all re-entry students in the fall of 1992. The survey included statements about faulty/re-entry interactions, traditional-age/re-entry relationships, classroom atmosphere and campus involvement. Some inconsistencies were reported about perceptions of classroom tension between traditional-age and re-entry students.

Dahle accounts for some of the differences in perceptions by saying,

"Re-entries are so pleased with the program. They are just plain delighted to be a member of a campus of this sort, so they may not notice any classroom tension."

Because the committee and the college recognize the re-entry population may reach 20 percent of the student population, the committee suggested "that the college welcome the real contributions of re-entry students and work to integrate these students more fully into the life of the college, that for the next few years the college monitor enrollment trends and evaluate the impact on campus of changes in the ratio of re-entries to traditional-age students, and that in three years the Dean of Continuing Education request a committee be appointed to conduct a study similar to this one."

Dr. Brent Pitts, who served on the committee, summed up its work by saying, "We hope there will be more awareness of the impact of the re-entry program on the college as a result of this study."

Honor council reports on this semester's cases

by Mitchell Brown

At the end of each semester the Honor Council makes available to the Meredith community a list of all of the cases the Council heard that semester, the verdict for each of these cases, and the penalty levied when necessary. It is important to understand that with each case the Honor Council takes into account all mitigating and aggravating factors, and as a result the penalties may differ from case to case even if the different cases have the same charge. Any questions or comments concerning the following list or any other matter relating to the Honor Code should be directed to either Mitchell Brown or Angela Toms.

The following cases were brought before the Honor Council during the spring semester of 1993: 1) Failure to follow directions given by college officials or staff members in the exercise of their official duties. Guilty verdict. Penalty: one week campus, 2) Male visitation - minor infraction. Guilty verdict. Penalty: one week-end campus, one semester warning, 3) Male visitation - minor infraction. Guilty verdict. Penalty: one week-end campus, one semester warning, 4) Fraudulent misuse of college documents - parking decals. Guilty verdict. Penalty: eight hours of community service, one semester warning, 5) Male visitation - minor infraction. Guilty verdict. Penalty: one call-
