

Meet the HERALD Staff...

compiled by the staff

Addie Tschamler, news editor for the Meredith Herald, isn't quite the calm and collected person she seems to be. Addie is a sophomore from Winston Salem and has a bad habit for procrastinating. She is a communications major and says that when no one else is around she tends to sing at the top of her lungs.

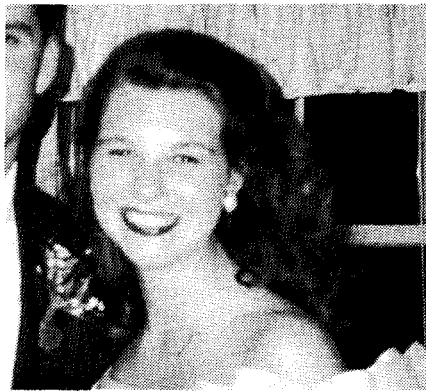

Being a news editor has a great amount of responsibility and a lot of stress. Addie says she takes "about a five minute walk in the evening to clear [her] head and to get away from pressure."

Senior reporter Jan Everhart is a politics major and English minor. She enjoys spending time with friends and going to the beach. Everhart can always lighten up any atmosphere by making cartoon voices.

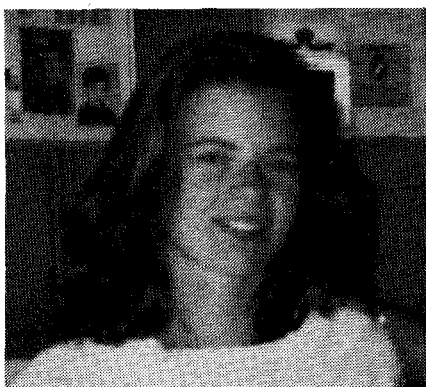

Twenty-one year old Everhart got to experience life in England due to Meredith Abroad and saw Queen Elizabeth.

Two loves of Everhart are the German language and animals.

Features Editor Clarky Lucus is a junior at Meredith College and is a speech communications major with an undecided English minor. She has considered broadcast journalism and interned last summer at channel 11 WTVD.

Her favorite food is melba toast, and she has a weakness for Godiva chocolate. She loves makeup, the mall, and her boyfriend Greg.

Copyeditor Melissa Massingill definitely has a keen eye for technicalities. She is always the first in class to point out a mistake. An aspiring Editor in Chief of the News and Observer, Massingill is sure to climb the journalism ladder with her ferocious dedication to searching for the ins and outs of any story. She got her first job as Sports Editor for The Garner News right before the semester started. A prodigy of Rod Cockshutt, Massingill enjoys chopping stories, skinny-dipping in the Meredith Pond, and chain smoking on the Beltline. She is one of the few English majors that actually loves learning Old English pronouns from Elouise Grathwal.

Mary Christian Parrot is a sophomore reporter here at Meredith and enjoys singing, playing handbells, and photography. Parrot will tolerate any type of music, but she prefers alternative. Her major is Journalism.

Parrot's hometown is Kinston, and she has an older sister who graduated from Meredith in 1993.

Her most embarrassing moment was when she was called "sir" on an airplane headed west for California.

Freshman staff member Marsha Tutor is a devout Christian who hopes people are able to recognize her strong belief through her actions and words.

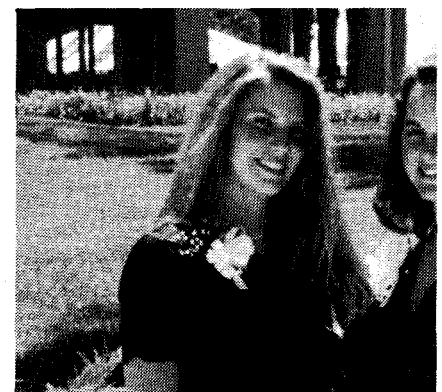

Tutor spent her summer working at Joni And Friends Christian Camp for mentally and physically handicapped kids. She had to keep a downs syndrome child while the child's parents attended sessions about handicapped children to overcome ideas that God cursed them.

Tutor enjoys working with her church and feel that she needs to involve it into her everyday life more. She thinks that our country has a desire to learn about

God and that she needs to minister in our country.

Tutor's favorite color is green, and she collects sunflowers and cows. Her favorite saying is "cool-mo-di."

As of right now, Tutor's goal is to be a math major with a focus on civil engineering.

In the first two weeks of school, freshman Laura Ross has walked into the wrong classroom, gotten lost while trying to find Frat Court, and been hit on by a fourteen year old.

This education major from Durham certainly seems to be having a rough time of it, but she says she's loving Meredith. "I chose Meredith because it was small and I thought the campus was beautiful," Laura says.

"I think I'm really going to like it here."

When saying "No" is your bigger weakness one would think it wouldn't pay to be "Peay." But if you know the girl your'e all the better for it.

I think Ashley Peay is a very intelligent and wonderful person. How do I know this? Because she works for the Meredith Herald, of course. Peay,
