

Just enough cluck for your buck

Boston Chicken is a new restaurant chain popping up all over our nation. Although Boston Chicken does not consider itself a fast-food restaurant, it is modeled much like one. It is not a fancy restaurant at all; however, the restaurant surely knows how to please its customers. For anyone who wants quick, friendly service and good food, Boston Chicken is definitely the place.

The atmosphere in Boston Chicken is relaxed—music is played softly in the background and open seating is available. The entire restaurant is non-smoking, but there are tables set up outside for those who wish to smoke.

The quality of food at Boston Chicken is excellent. All food is served hot right in front of the customer. The menu offers eighteen side dishes including: mashed potatoes and gravy, stuffing, baked beans, macaroni and cheese, and pasta salad, to name a few. The restaurant's main dish is chicken prepared in a variety of ways: roasted chicken, chicken salad, and chicken sandwiches. Soft drinks such as Coke, Mountain Dew, Sprite, and Diet Coke are served at the beverage stand: the customers serve their own, and refills are complimentary.

The quality of service is equally impressive. The employees are always smiling and friendly. The manager even gives tours of the kitchen at the customer's request. All the employees are eager to please, and the customer always comes first. The service is quick, so waiting is kept to a minimum.

The price of all this is a bit more than places like Kenny Roger's Chicken and Kentucky Fried Chicken. A chicken sandwich, one side dish, and one beverage costs about six dollars. Three side items cost four dollars. A bowl of soup costs three dollars, and a dinner for two costs between ten and fifteen dollars. True, the service and food are impressive, but the prices are a little steep.

Boston Chicken definitely deserves a taste test for those who have not tried it. Although the prices are about a dollar or so more than restaurants comparable to it, Boston Chicken offers quality food and great service. There are restaurants conveniently located on Glennwood Avenue in Raleigh, Kildaire Farms in Cary, Eastgate Shopping Center in Chapel Hill, and 15-501 (beside South Square Mall) in Durham.
