

Question of the Week:

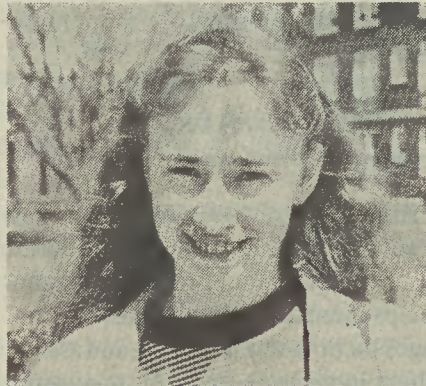

Do you think U.S. prisons are fair, harsh, or lenient?

compiled by Jetsop

Jenna Meck
freshman

"Too lenient-The punishment is not enough for the really bad ones."

Carrie Shaw senior

"It's fair as long as they stick to their original rules and regulations."

Colleen Miller
junior

"It goes back and forth. Sometimes people stay in too long for a little crime, and others get out too soon."

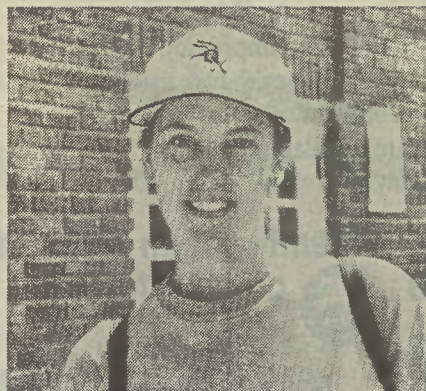

Amy Wescott
junior

"It depends on the person and the circumstances."

Ashley Peay
junior

"It is definitely too lenient for many reasons."

Julia Rathbone
junior

"Too lenient-Prison should be a place to think about your wrong doings no to watch T.V. and play sports."

Tennile Hurley
freshman

"Too lenient-They let people on parole too soon who shouldn't be out without serving their time."

Mary Katherine Hobbs
freshman

"Too lenient-They use over-crowding as an excuse to let criminals out before their time is served."
