

LIBRARY continued from page eight

nels 10 and 15 are mostly dark. After the satellite, 10 will always have something on it," Bowling happily remarked. There will be a studio area built in the bean-bag room that will serve as a filming station.

Bowling spoke of her intro to video production course, and it was easy to see that she enjoyed working with her students: "I like working with the students. Teaching an intro course is neat. I really stress an independent feel with the class, so they'll have the knowledge on their own." Bowling is also the advisor for the Meredith College Video Club. The Club is currently getting ready for videotaping graduation.

Bowling said that MCTV is "a hidden service on campus." Not many people know how much time and effort goes into taping and editing a college event. "Right now we are working on Stunt," Bowling added.

MCTV actually is a branch of Media Services, which is also located on the first floor of the library. John Kincheloe has been Meredith's media specialist for ten years. He and Rick McBane are busy buying hardware—audio visual der-puff football games where the guys would go as girls and vice-versa every single year. They were always looked forward to because they were simply fun! The guys got a chance to show the girls how ridiculous we felt they were, and the girls got a chance to do the same. Maybe then we could show how girls could be a little more economical. For example — borrow you dress or spend $3 at Good Will. It may not be on the cutting edge of style, but it'll work!

LETTER continued from page nine

After all, who are you trying to impress? You know everyone there. Furthermore, I don't think you will see many couples going out and eating dinner. I think that most guys still feel a little uncomfortable being in drag. If we don't have the right pair of shoes or can't borrow them from a friend, we'll simply go barefoot, wear sandals or systems such as VCRs, TVs, and sound systems for the campus—buying software, which are videos and slides, and educating people how to use this equipment. Kincheloe's need to be involved throughout campus has been a great asset to the Meredith community. He has taught intro to drawing, taught with Susan Squires in the history department, and taught Native American music and a non Western art class in the art department. Kincheloe has also taught experimental films and video art in both the English and art departments. He said that he tries "to be available for guest lecturing in other topics in other departments." He went on to say, "I like to stay in the classroom. I enjoy variety. That's the advantage of this college."

His love of Native American cultures has kept him busy. He is active in working with a number of Native Americans in a variety of ways. He attends as many Pow Wows as he can, and all of his vacation time is spent in New Mexico along the Rio Grande River visiting three good friends of his that are Pueblos. He is also involved in the politics of Ohio related to protecting the Great Serpent Mound that is a quarter of a mile long and made to resemble a snake. "I encourage people to help in protecting this and other mounds," he said.

Interviewing John Kincheloe was like reading an intriguing autobiography that can't be put down. He showed me some of his graphite, elaborate, realistic drawings, and they were phenomenal.

Rick McBane works along with Kincheloe to circulate the audio-visual that goes out of the building. When asked what he likes most about his job in media services, he replied, "The diversity and working with other departments. I truly have no idea what I'll be doing when I come in the morning. It keeps it from getting boring." McBane was also quick to point out his appreciation and liking of the different personalities of the various departments.

McBane told me the history of how media services and MCTV evolved, and I was automatically interested. In 1985, Kincheloe negotiated with Cable Vision to get Meredith wired. He managed to also get three channels to be filtered out of the basic cable package. This negotiation was a great advancement for Meredith because it provided students with better information.

Carlyle Campbell Library has got some amazing people on its staff, proving that appearances aren't all that they seem.

The Herald staff wishes everyone a great Easter Break! Rest up for the last 10 days of class upon return! We will!

(There will not be a paper the week after Easter.)

Words of wisdom: Don't eat too many Cadbury eggs!

tennis shoes! We'll have someone fix our hair long in advance and pick it up on our way to get our makeup done.

I personally feel this would be a wonderful, inexpensive idea that would be fun for all involved. Why not take a survey through your paper to get the opinion of the students on this idea? If the admission can be held down to a few dollars, I think you would be surprised at the number of people who show up for it. I would certainly be there — dragging my girlfriend around all day long, wondering how she even got herself into this mess!

— A concerned, weary, and absolutely broke NCSU student stated. "Sixty percent of the people attending universities are women. We want to attract those women to Meredith."

WEEMS continued from page four

Weems stated that if the program goes through, the earliest we can expect to see students from Barbados on our campus is the fall of 1996. "Only time will tell if we will be successful, but I think we will get students," Weems said. "I think we have real potential for a summer program and even more potential for getting Barbados students."

STORE continued from page one other such literature (i.e. King Lear and Hamlet) at Meredith ran from $3.99-$10.60. At Addam's they stopped at around $7.95.

Many students do not see why college textbook prices must be an issue at all.

Sophomore Elizabeth Rogers said, "As much as we pay to go to Meredith, I don't see why we can't rent our books instead of buying them, or why they can't just be loaned to us. I know of some other schools that do that."

Some students think they should have a choice between buying their textbooks or loaning them.

"I think it would be helpful to many students if they had a choice between buying a book or loaning it. There are some textbooks that you may want to keep and others that you'll probably never use again, so there is no point in buying them for a much higher price than you could possibly ever get when you sell them back," said an anonymous student.

The Herald found that accessories at Addam's were slightly less expensive than those found at Meredith. The regular college-logo T-shirt at Addam's ran around $14.00, while Meredith Supply Store T-shirts cost about $16.00. An NC State windbreaker at Addam's, with no comparison at Meredith, was $19.99. A key chain and attached leather i.d. card holder was $9.99 at Addam's, although it was without the Meredith logo.

INTERN continued from page four

Not only do interns have the chance to work with the government this summer, they have the chance to grow with 27 other people. Last year the group of interns kept a huge notebook posted on the bulletin board and wrote down all the crazy things people said or did. At the end of the summer, the group had a book full of memories.

Hall will proudly represent Meredith College this summer, and we wish her the best of luck with her new internship and her summer life at college.