more year she was an RA and a member of the Phi and Student Foundation. She was a member of the freshman honor society, Alpha Lambda Delta; and she is now a member of Kappa Nu Sigma, Meredith's scholastic honor society, and the honorary leadership society, Silver Shield. She was recently named to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities. Off campus she serves as president of the college council at First Baptist Church and sings alto in Second Voice, First Baptist's college group singing ensemble.

Her plans after graduation include a July 13 wedding to Jess Moore, a '91 graduate of NC State. They will be married at First Baptist Church, where they first met. She hopes to go to graduate school in the fall and has applied to NC State's counselor education program. She plans to earn a master's degree with a concentration in student development and higher education. After grad school, Tyvoll says, she and Moore "would really love to make Raleigh our home, but at the same time we're flexible, and we'll go where we have to go for jobs."

Tyvoll says the wedding plans are progressing. Her wedding gown is hanging next to the graduation gown in her closet, and her sisters Karen and Laura, along with Meredith friends June Holland, Erica Balmer, Amanda White and Rebecca Huffstetler, have agreed to be her attendants.

Leadership Conference held despite weather

By Allison Carter

Last Saturday the Winter Leadership Conference took place here at Meredith College in Ledford Hall. The conference was entitled "Empowering Women: On the Roads We Travel." The conference was originally scheduled for Saturday, February 3, but was postponed because of bad weather.

The conference was designed by a committee consisting of a representative from each class. The members were Mika Murdoch, Regina Mack, Clarky Lucas, Allison Carter, and Heather Wilkin. The committee was overseen by Shelly Hoover and Cheryl Jenkins who both work in the Office of Student Activities.

Rhonda Mann from North Carolina State University was the keynote speaker. Her lecture was entitled "The Signs of Progress and the Turns for Change: A Road Map for Women." Mann's lecture consisted of a "herstory" lesson with facts on eleven women that were well-known and not so well-known to many Americans.

Mann advises young women who plan to be future leaders to "not let anyone ever tell you because you are a woman that you can't do anything."

Paul Potorti was one of the break out session speakers. His lecture was entitled "Exploring the Roadblocks Among Women and Men." He spoke about how women and men can communicate, they have different ways to express their feelings.

Potorti says, "The most fundamental thing is basic communication. You must realize that the way you communicate with others should be the way you want others to communicate with you."

The second break out session speaker was Sharon Cannon, Meredith Dean of Students. Her lecture was entitled "Motivate to Escalate." Dean Cannon spoke mainly about setting goals in order to reach your highest potential. If an individual is motivated then she has the ability to motivate others.

At the end of the day, the committee members led round table discussions of topics that were mentioned throughout the conference or pertained to women's issues of today. Overall, the conference received positive comments from many of those who attended.

tradition that is special to Tyvoll. The mother-daughter tea and the father-daughter dance are two that she says she'll always remember. "It was so wonderful sharing a piece of Meredith with them, to share my life at college with my parents was very special," she said. What else makes Meredith unique? "I love to walk through Joyner Hall and know I can pop into any faculty office and talk not just about my classes or thesis, but also about getting married. She will remember her favorite classes as Dr. Garry Walton's Shakespeare's Comedies, Dr. Louise Taylor's Advanced Composition and Dr. John Creagh's Oral Interpretation of Literature.

Tyvoll lives in a single room on the second floor of Heilman dorm. "I don't have a roommate because nobody could stand to live with me and the hours I keep. I like to go to bed at 9:00 or 10:00 p.m. and then get up at 3:00 a.m. to study. It's too crazy for anyone else," she laughed. The hours may be crazy, but her GPA shows it works for her.

If she had a million dollars to donate to Meredith, Tyvoll would give it to the Division of Student Development. "I truly believe that it is through extra-curricular activities that students learn things they couldn't possibly learn in a college classroom. And," she added, "if I didn't give the money to student activities, I'd give it to the library."
