"A Knight of Royalty" at the Meredith formal

By Carol Conerly

The Raleigh Civic Center was decked out for "A Knight of Royalty" that many Meredith angels will not soon forget Saturday night. Balloons in the royal colors of purple and gold were floating above tables and chairs all around the room. A backdrop featuring a castle's ballroom hung behind the D.J. to create an atmosphere of royalty. The tables were filled with gold crowns, purple streamers, white candles and gold stars which all contributed to the theme of a Knight of Royalty.

The women of Meredith college and their dates looked spectacular for a night on the town. There were dress blues and midnight black tuxedos, top hats and even canes. Several dates grabbed gold crowns off the tables which they wore like royalty. Meredith women sported both short and sassy dresses and long and elegant gowns. There were purple sequins, black feathers, turquoise beads, and navy chiffon just to name a few of the unique styles worn Saturday night.

The dance began at 9pm and probably would have lasted all night if the D.J. had not packed his bags at 1am. Cathy Tunstall, one of the dance committee's junior co-chairs, said, "I was very impressed with the turnout. People showed up earlier and stayed later. The D.J. was the key." He did keep everyone happy. No music lover could have been left unsatisfied. Lorenzo King of L.K. Productions played country, techno, rap and lots of beach and disco favorites. Dancers covered the floor until the very end of the evening.

The general consensus on campus seems to be that "A Knight of Royalty" was a huge success. Elizabeth Williamson said, "I danced all night to lots of great music. The D.J. was awesome."

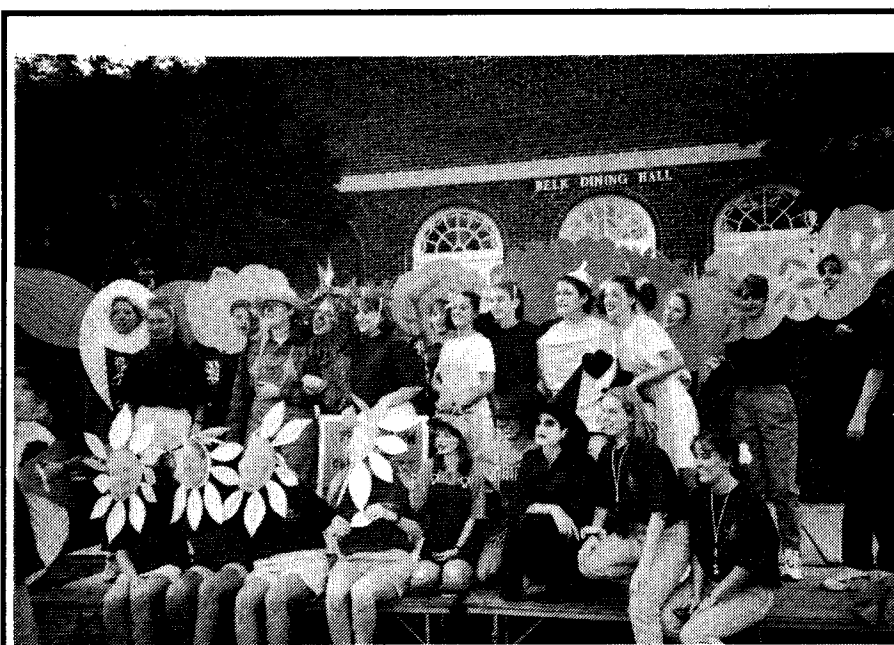

Tori Nicholls was also happy with her evening. She said, "Usually I'm not much of a dancer, but the music was so good that I don't think I sat down all night." There were not many people sitting down either. Most of the chairs were filled with the jackets and high heels of those out on the floor. The only justified complaint was the refreshment table ran out of punch and cup at about 11:30 p.m. Other than that, the "Knight of Royalty" was an unqualified success. Cheryl Jenkins from Student Activities and the co-chairs from each class deserve a huge thank-you for putting so much time and effort into making this Spring Formal one we will not soon forget.

The seniors won best skit at Stunt, for which they performed scenes out of The Wizard of Oz.

Seniors seize '96 Stunt

By Allison Carter

All of the festivities of the annual Stunt competition took place in the courtyard starting about 4:30 in the afternoon last Thursday April 11 and running past the regular dinner hours.

Courtney Lancaster and Cathy Tunstall were the MRA co-chairs of the event. Before each event, the co-chairs explained all of the rules in detail.

The Bathtub Ring opened the ceremonies with the singing of the National Anthem. The group was standing on the stage which would later hold the numerous participants of the greatly anticipated Lip Sync.

The first event was the limbo, which took place in front of Belk Dining Hall. The seniors won, with the juniors coming in second, followed by the sophomores and then the freshman.

The bat spin was next, with the sophomores coming in first for this event. The seniors were second, freshman third and juniors fourth.

The three-legged race was the third event. Again the seniors placed first, then the juniors, followed by the sophomores and then freshman.

In the tug-o-war, the juniors came out on top with the seniors finishing second. The freshman were third while the sophomores came in fourth.

The next event was the balloon toss. This time the sophomores snagged first with a tie for second between the freshman and junior classes. The se- See Stunt, page 5
