Class presidents excited about future

In addition to positions such as SGA President and MRA President, last week's elections also decided class presidents for the rising senior, junior, and sophomore classes. Ginger Hudson was elected senior class president, Erin Grant was elected junior class president, and Meredith Bolton won the sophomore class position.

Hudson, a current junior originally from Richmond, VA, is busy preparing for her role as president for the senior class.

"We have a lot of great events going on," she said. These events include Class Day, 99th Night, the Class Gift, and the Class Doll.

Hudson realizes that in the senior year of the class of 1999, schedules will get much busier. However, she feels that "a lot of people will want to participate in the class events." She also stresses the importance of everyone's participation.

"I think people will want to have an awesome year, and with everyone's participation, we can really make the most of our senior year," she said.

Hudson has been involved in class leadership roles since she was a first year. She was freshman class president, sophomore class historian, and is currently junior class president.

Erin Grant, a newcomer to class offices, will be the next president for the class of 2000. She has already been busily planning her role as junior class president. "We're going to be implementing changes," she said. Grant hopes to have more class meetings. The junior class will be able to take care of class business and also have time to discuss the things going on in their class and throughout the college.

She also plans to develop a suggestion box in the Cate Center for the juniors to express their concerns or give comments. The box will be checked once a week. A final idea that Grant is working on is a Junior Journal newsletter. It will come out every other week and will keep the class up-to-date on events and news from the juniors.

Grant is "very, very excited" about next year and her role as junior class president. A sophomore from Greensboro, NC, she hopes to make next year wonderful for the class of 2000.

Meredith Bolton, current freshman class president, is continuing that position by becoming next year's sophomore class president. Bolton plans to "work hard to promote class and school spirit, because these two things will form the basis for a wonderful year." The Mother-Daughter Tea and the Father-Daughter Dance are only two of the events Bolton will have to help plan next year.

Like Hudson, Bolton recognizes the need for participation from everyone in the class. "I encourage everyone in our class to work together to plan the events and participate in the events," she said. Bolton says that with everyone working together, the class of 2001 will have a wonderful sophomore year.

Bolton, a current freshman from Fayetteville, NC, is excited about her future role as Sophomore Class President.
