

Possible 'Professor' Greene sighting

LESLIE MAXWELL

If you see a suspicious person on Meredith's campus, do you know what to do?

You're right if you say report it immediately to Meredith's Campus Police. But some students on campus don't. And that bothers Campus Police Chief Mike Hoke.

He said it was "frustrating" to hear students talk about someone they saw more than 24 hours ago.

One person in particular who the Police are on the lookout for is Robert Hunter Greene, a man who has been responsible for breaking and entering and trespassing on area campuses including Duke, UNC-CH and NC State. He usually claims to be a faculty member and travels by bicycle. At Meredith, he has said that he is an adjunct professor in the physics department.

The first time he appeared on Meredith's campus, the police gave him a trespass past few weeks, Hoke has received two reported sightings of Greene. The reported sightings occurred in the afternoon around 3 or 4 p.m.

"I am reasonably sure that the man people are seeing is a new male staff member that they don't recognize," Hoke said. But, he noted, "I'm being very cautious."

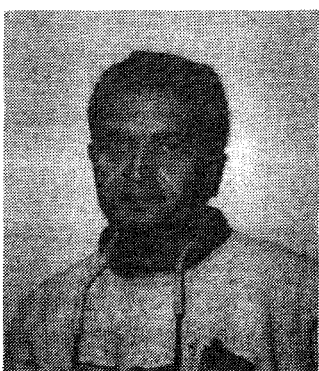

He has sent Greene's profile and updated picture to all faculty and staff so that they can recognize him.

Office thieves "thrive on the inherent openness of colleges and churches," he said.

Therefore Hoke stresses that it is important for students to notify campus police immediately if they see a suspicious person on campus. When a sighting is reported, the police can go to the last place the person has been seen.

MCA holds winter retreat

The Meredith Christian Association held its annual winter retreat last weekend. Ten members of the club traveled to Camp Mundo Vista, near Asheville, to help with camp renovations. Along with painting and cleaning out the camp's buildings, members came together for fellowship, where they sang.

MCA also holds two other retreats for members--one in the fall and one in the spring--with the Baptist Union.

Senior Rachel Bennett, MCA president, defined the goal of MCA as being an "outreach to the Meredith community and to the outside community."

With the help of adviser Sam Carothers, the campus minister, and Joi Williams, assistant campus minister, MCA leaves a lasting impression on the students involved.

"It was really neat to know that the work we did will later help campers become closer to Christ," said Bennett.

The members spent all day Saturday helping clean out cabins and repainting the worn walls. This is a way for the students to outreach not only in the surrounding communities, but also across the state.

MCA also works with other schools for outreach programs.
