Senior art show opens doors

TRACY SUMNER
Staff Writer

On Sunday, six graduating art majors presented their work in the final art show of the semester. The exhibition, which is free and open to the public, is located in the Gaddy-Hamrick Art Building.

All Meredith art majors are required to display their work in an art show before graduating. The students choose their best works to put on display, and many are available for sale.

"This is the first time people have seen my whole body of work," said artist Brandy Murray, one of the featured seniors. Murray, whose work focuses on the human form and its vulnerability, has several clay sculptures for sale.

"I feel like I'm on display, too," she continued. "It is something to get used to, but I'm glad to have the opportunity to do it now."

The art show is the final college project for the seniors, most of whom will make a career of selling art at similar exhibitions. The senior art exhibition reminds the featured artists that graduation is right around the corner.

Megan Lacy, who specializes in photography, commented that it is "sad to have all my artwork on display."

"I have always watched other seniors have their shows, and it's sad that it is all over."

Katie Hilbert is also a featured photographer in the show.

stitching. Many of her works are inspired by European culture and sights such as the Eiffel Tower.

Ruth Burton Toaso hopes to teach art after graduating. Many of her works, which display nature and organic themes, are colorful pastel paintings.

Joan McGuire, who worked as a nurse for 25 years, discovered that art was her passion and enrolled at Meredith as an art student. McGuire's pieces are mostly three-dimensional clay figures. Because she spent most of her childhood in the western United States, McGuire's work is primarily influenced by Spanish and Spanish-American art.

The art exhibition will be on display daily until May 13. This Sunday, from 2-4 p.m., the Faculty Art Exhibition will open in the Gaddy-Hamrick Art Building.

TIMOTHY SPARKS
Professor of Voice

Curious about singing? Register for Meredith's voice class, MUS 050. It's offered every semester on Tuesdays from 5 to 5:50 p.m.

There are no auditions, and all are welcome.

The course fulfills a humanities general education requirement and a minor elective requirement.

Contact Timothy Sparks at 760-8610 for more information.

Junior class Crook Hunt continues

As of Tuesday evening, the class of 2002 was still searching for the Crook, hidden by the class of 2001.

Each day, the senior class provides a clue for the junior class. One inch of the Crook must be visible at all times no matter where the Crook is hidden.

Clues during the past week have included mentions of darkness, crime and loud noises.

The junior class has until 4:30 p.m. today to find the Crook. At 4:30, the senior class holds its Senior Class Picnic.
