Residents in Brewer hall received news Monday afternoon that they may have to move into Faircloth.

On Monday students living in Brewer residence hall received an email from Director of Residence Life Heidi LeCount informing them they will have to move into Faircloth residence hall.

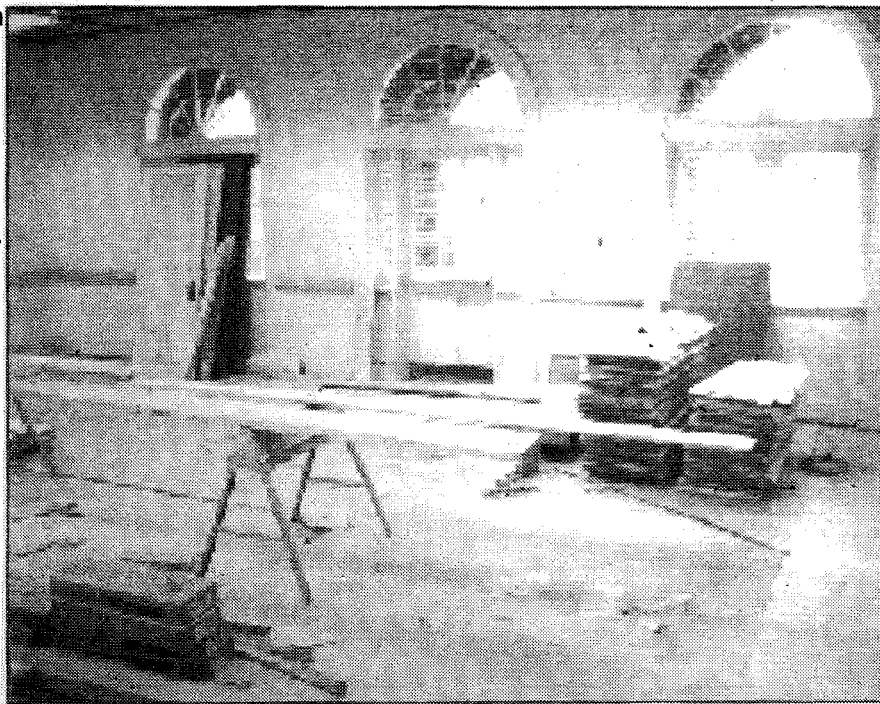

As part of an improvement initiative on campus, dorm renovation began in Faircloth last summer and is estimated to be completed by the end of the semester. The dorm was closed this semester to complete renovations.

Resident Advisers were told during Resident Adviser training at the beginning of the semester that if renovations were on schedule residents will have to move into the newly renovated building.

The purpose of the move is to continue renovations to the residence halls as quickly and efficiently as possible so construction would be completed on campus.

along, since all dormitories are scheduled to be renovated

Most students who live in Brewer are freshmen and sophomore students with the exceptions of Resident Advisers.

Senior Laura Bates is the Resident Adviser for the first floor. She has lived in Brewer four years, as a resident her freshmen year and as a Resident Adviser her sophomore, junior and senior year.

"I have been privileged enough to live in Brewer for all of my four years here at Meredith. It has become my home. I am saddened by the idea that in my final year at Meredith I will be ripped from my homey surroundings just to move to an updated dorm room," said Bates.

Junior Neph Bailey is also a Resident Adviser in Brewer for the second floor, said the move is adding stress to an already stressful time.

She said, "I am feeling very stressed about a mid semester move with finals and trying to finish up this semester. It's like picking up and starting all over again."

Students said have mixed emotions about the possibility of moving into Faircloth.

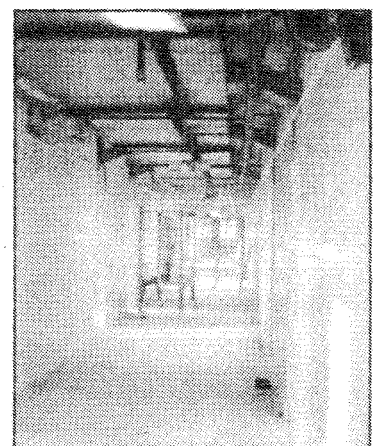

"I feel privileged that we will be able to stay in a new building, but it's stressful moving mid-semester," Bailey said.

Bates has similar feelings as well. "I think Faircloth renovations are great and definitely needed. I know the college will save money by keeping the construction company here, but I feel as though it will be such an inconvenience."

There was a meeting held Tuesday night to clarify the details of the situation. Look for coverage of this meeting and the possible move to Faircloth in next week's Herald.
