

The recently released 2004-2005 issue of The Colton Review: A Journal of Art, Literature, & Opinion has a printing error. Karen Ainsley's poem, "Papa," was selected for publication but does not appear in the magazine. Printed below is her poem, which was chosen for inclusion based on its style and creativity. Please pick up your copy of the journal in Joyner Hall as soon as possible, and be sure you congratulate Karen and the other contributing writers on their submissions.

Papa

I kissed Grandma's cheek today (in the kitchen)
 then I scurried into the living room (funny,
 I looked for you in the living room as though you might be there) and after I'd looked around (cousins, uncles, my father Watching Carolina football)
 Paused
 I flushed-embarrassed fled back into the kitchen plastering smiles over tears because I'd scurried
 so quickly in habit
 thinking you'd be there
