Former President Heilman Celebrates Women Veterans

By Inaya Rivera, Staff Photographer

Dr. E. Bruce Heilman visited Meredith College on Wednesday, November 7, 2018 in order to honor our nation's women veterans.

As Dr. Heilman told the story of a friend and fellow World War II veteran, he spoke about what it feels like to have survived such a terrible war. "One almost feels guilty for surviving."

During Dr. Heilman's speech he touched on why it is important to acknowledge women veterans: "For women veterans there can be additional struggles since society still believes that all veterans are men."

Avenging Angels vs. Greensboro

By Mimi Mays, Associate Editor

On Sunday Dec 2, the Avenging Angels gave their all to their second game of the weekend, having played Mary Washington the day before. Throughout the first two quarters, fans might not have known the Angels were battling fatigue; half-time found Meredith up by nine and Coach Laquanda Quick optimistic. But the Greensboro Pride brought greater tenacity to the third quarter, and with more and more Meredith turnovers, Greensboro got ample opportunity to gain the lead. Still steadfast, the Angels finished out the game with 51 points to Greensboro's 64.

"It frustrates me when unnecessary outside factors impact success," remarked Coach Quick. "For example, the scheduling of the season was done before I came to Meredith. Having a non-conference game the day before an important conference game was not beneficial to our team." In the coming week, the Angels will face Methodist on Dec. 4 and Coastal Carolina the very next evening. With only a day break, the players hope they will be able to rally.

Meredith College Professor Emerita Fran Page is one of the 2018 recipients of the Raleigh Medal of Arts, presented on November 13 at Fletcher Opera Theater in the Duke Energy Center for the Performing Arts. The Raleigh Medal of Arts is the City's highest arts honor.

Page was recognized for her 36 years of service to Meredith College's music program and her work as founder and director of the Capital City Girls Choir, a choir for girls from age 9 to 18.

For more than three decades, Page has shaped the lives of the youth in the greater Raleigh area as well as young women from around the United States. She is considered a pioneer in her field – balancing the demand of leading a college music program with creating one of the finest girls choir programs in the country. She oversaw a three-choir program with a busy performance schedule around the world. The Capital City Girls Choir has performed at the White House, Carnegie Hall and venues across Europe. At Meredith, Page served in many capacities, including as chair of her department, coordinator of music education, and director of choral activities. She has also served as president of the North Carolina Music Educators Association and the National Association for Music Education's southern division.

In the program for the awards ceremony, Page said "Music is such a gift. It frees the soul and touches the heart the way nothing else can. I am so fortunate to have been able to share the gift of music with so many. I am immensely honored to have my work recognized by this award."

really draining part of the semester, too," explains point guard Maddy Gladwell. Even if they're not back to full force before these coming games, then certainly after some rest and recharging.

"Our goal is to improve every time we step on the basketball court," assures Quick. "There is so much that these players haven't learned yet. They are improving on these things everyday. I am still optimistic about the direction that the program is going in."
