WOMEN'S CLUB NEWS

At the April 27 meeting, the group indicated subjects in which they were most interested. Three topics led the list -- travel, books, and N. C. inheritance laws. The club plans small groups and future programs built around the interests of the members.

Following the business meeting, Helen Juillian shared with us her experiences behind the Iron Curtain when she was sent to a trade fair in Czechoslovakia as one of four representatives of the Canadian press. Helen was staff writer for Chatelaine, a women's magazine published in both French and English.

Remember: the next meeting will be Friday, May 25. All PKS women are invited.

Ted Wolf of New York City, who owns a condominium at Beachwalk along with his wife Cheryl, is a reader after our own heart. He not only reads Shore Line, he enjoys it enough to write and tell us so. And, what's more, he enclosed a check for $25 to help pay the paper's cost.

THIS "I can't tell you how much the newsletter does to give us a better sense of the community, the people that make it tick, and the issues that are of concern to 'N the area," Wolf wrote. "Although we won't be getting down too often the next THAT year or two, the time that we do spend there will be enriched by what The Shore Line has provided us."

Wolf's comments were doubly appreciated because they make us feel we are having some success in achieving our goal of informing PKS property owners, both permanent and part time, about the activities of their town government and its people.

Mayor Ken Haller and Finance Commissioner Emily White agreed that Wolf's check although greatly appreciated should be returned. They decided that the Wolf's are entitled to Shore Line free like every other resident or property owner in the town.

Another faithful reader, Madeleine Filan of Falls Church, Va., had an enquiry that required a bit of research. She wanted to know the kinds of snakes (non-human, of course) we have on Bogue Banks, and which of these are poisonous.
