

Germany, near Nuremburg, where her husband continued to work for the U.S. Government in a civilian capacity until his retirement in 1973. Their other son and daughter were born in Germany.

They came back then to his home: Connecticut. They lived in Danbury, and had as neighbors, the Raoul Casases. Maggie's husband died five years ago, and she began thinking her house was too big. The Casases kept coming down here to McGinnis Point, where they'd bought a condo, and eventually they dragged Maggie along. She was enchanted and made up her mind to settle here herself, moving in last November. Three of her children now live in Connecticut and one in Virginia. There are 2 grandchildren.

She especially loves the daily water aerobics at the sports center, has found friends at St. Egbert's Church, is already doing volunteer work at Martha's Mission, and takes a walk every night. When her regular walking buddies are away, some other neighbors who walk "adopt me", says she, and off they go. In August she's going to visit her very fit 97 year old mother in Germany.

With all this energy and enthusiasm, Maggie can indeed be called "adoptable".

Did you ever know anyone who was actually born in the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota? You now have your chance to meet Sue Glover, who recently moved into a condominium at Fiddler's Walk in Beacon's Reach. Her father was a surgeon at the clinic but soon set up his own practice in Lima, Ohio. Since then Sue has lived in many places and parts of the world. It is really hard to know where to begin to describe the fascinating life this most interesting lady has been and still is living.

When she was a teenager and World War II started, her father joined the Army and was stationed at a hospital near Asheville, N. C. So her interest in our State was aroused, but it took an ad for Beacon's Reach in the Piedmont Airline Magazine many years later to get her to find Pine Knoll Shores and move here from Chicago. In the meantime, she went to Bradford Junior College, married, and raised a family. A son is now with Cincinnati Gas and Electric Company, and a daughter, Dr. Lucy Moore, has her own clinic in Danville, Virginia. Three young grandchildren are one of Sue's great delights in life.

She has always been interested in politics and was on the Board of Education in Lima, Ohio. Since moving here she has been active in the Newcomer's Club and participated in the Woman's Club. But her great love of people and travel, adventure and discovery led her to her present profession. She is a licensed International Tour Director, having graduated from the International Tour Management Institute in San Francisco, and is now employed by The Thomas Gohagan and Company in Chicago. They arrange tours for the Alumni of 86 colleges and universities. She will direct 6 or 8 tours a year and in June will be conducting a safari to Kenya for the University of North Carolina. In July she will be in Ireland with a Brown University tour. She lived in Nairobi, Kenya some years ago and was in business there, so that the African safaris are almost like a home-coming for her, and she will do several more this year. However, her enthusiastic love for Pine Knoll Shores will be a great addition to our town, when she is in residence between tours. I only wish I could go back on one of those safaris with her!

We apologize for the brevity of this month's article, but "baby season" is suddenly upon us, and we're so busy that we almost missed the Shore Line deadline!

Instead of one patient this month, let's mention the hundreds of babies being brought in to us, and which will continue to come in throughout the summer. So far in May, we've got screech owls, opossums, bluebirds, grackles, mourning doves, mallards, mockingbirds,
