

Former Employee Gets Degree In Optometry

James Pierce Hill, former Fieldcrest employee, received a degree of Doctor of Optometry at commencement exercises at Chicago College of Optometry June 20. He was presented with the Division of Clinical Optometry award. He is a former employee of the Finishing Mill and is the son of Samuel D. Hill, a weaver at the Bedspread Mill who retired under the pension plan, June 1, 1951.

Young Hill was presented with the Cum Laude honor award for scholastic achievement. He is a member of the Tomb and Key fraternity, the Phi Beta Kappa of optometry, and Omega Delta, professional optometric fraternity.

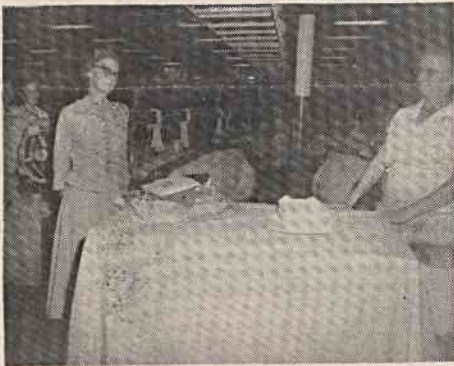

He plans to establish a practice in North Carolina. Five years of college work are now required for a degree in optometry. There are only 10 colleges of optometry in the United States and the Chicago College of Optometry is one of the largest institutions in that field.

Kitchen Komment

Trying to train your children in good table manners? More can be done with an attractive table setting than with nagging words! Spread a fresh, gaily colored cotton tablecloth and matching napkins. If the kids still spill things at first, it's no tragedy, as such table linens can be sudsed easily enough. A pretty tablecloth shows you trust the children and appeals to their festive feeling, and encourages an extra effort at good manners.

Men are the only people on earth who think they have more sense than women.

Mrs. Wilson Honored

An informal party in the department was given Mrs. Annie L. Wilson, long-service employee of the Sheeting Weave Room, on the last day she worked before her retirement under the Marshall Field & Company Pension Plan. Mrs. Wilson stands at left of the table showing the cake and gifts presented Mrs. Wilson by her friends in the weave room. Shown at right is Mrs. Elizabeth Webster of the Weave Room.
