A Good Workman Uses Hand Tools Safely

BY J. T. MacISAAC
Engineering Dept.

A good workman takes pride in knowing his job and in being able to perform his work well. Nearly all work requires the use of tools. If a workman has the proper tools for the job and they are in good repair, his work proceeds easily and efficiently. On the other hand when he does not have the right tools or the tools are not in good condition, not only is his work inferior, but the job seems "aggravating" and the workman himself is more subject to injury from an accident.

Sometimes, through haste or thoughtlessness, the worker takes a chance and gets into difficulty because of misuse of the tool. For example, you have seen persons hurt because they used a knife for a screwdriver, or used a wrench for a hammer and wound up with some mashed fingers. You perhaps have known someone who stumbled over some hand tools left in an alley, or who received

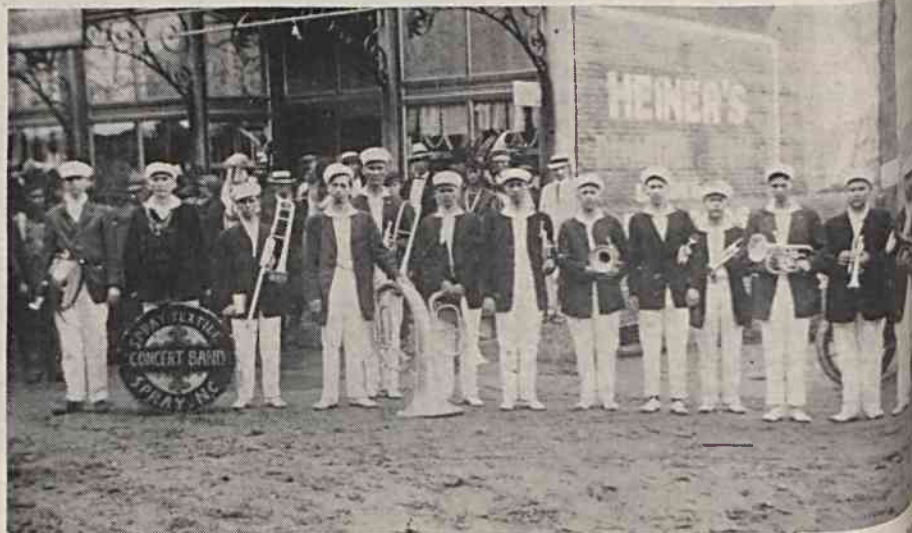

J. T. MacIsaac a head injury when a wrench was left on a ladder or overhead fixture; or perhaps you have given first aid to a person who injured his hand when a dirty or greasy wrench slipped.

You probably also know of instances where excessive pressure on a small wrench caused the wrench to break and resulted in some skinned knuckles or sprained wrists. All too often we have seen chisels or punches with mushroomed heads used which could have caused painful cuts had the chips broken off when hit by the hammer.

The safe use of hand tools requires that a workman develop safe habits. This means that he must form the habit of using the right tool for each job, must keep the tools in good repair, and when tools are not in use he must store them properly.

A GOOD WORKMAN IS ALSO A SAFE WORKMAN.

Letters From Servicemen

Dear Mr. Miller:

I received my Military Service Bonus a few days ago and want you to know that it is very much appreciated. I have also been receiving the "Mill Whistle" and enjoy reading it very much. I hope you will continue to send it throughout my entire career in the service.

I miss the working conditions and the employees in the Electric Blanket Mill very much and I am looking forward to the day that I can return to my old job. Thanks again for the Military Service Bonus.

Dear Mr. Rimmer:

Thank you for the Fieldcrest MILL WHISTLE. It makes me feel very good to read the news of the plant and to know that everything is running smoothly. I hope the progress will continue in the future as it has in the past. Please continue to send me the paper.
