Meet the Foremen

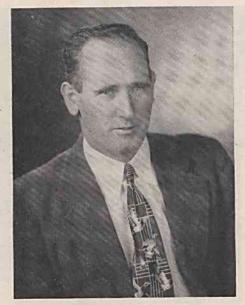

James C. Haraway is foreman of the Wool Picking Department at the Blanket Mill. The department is a blending operation using the woolen system to process wool, foreign cottons and various man-made fibers, Acrilan, rayon, nylon, orlon, etc. for the filling in Fieldcrest blankets.

The department begins with the raw materials in large bales as received from vendors. Mr. Haraway and the other members of the department are responsible for blending the fibers according to exact formulas specifying the percentage of each fiber in the blend. The material then goes to the carding department or sometimes to the dyehouse.

Mr. Haraway has been a supervisor for 21 years. He became assistant foreman in 1937 and was promoted to foreman in December, 1949. He worked as a card feeder, ran cards, was cotton weigher for the Blanket Mill, and was lot man in the Wool Picking Department before he became a supervisor.

He has a reputation for conscientious work, giving his best efforts on the many phases of the foreman's job. His associates say he holds the respect and confidence of the members of his department. He appears successful in impressing upon his co-workers the importance of safe work, high quality and low costs.

Mr. Haraway was born near Danville, Va. and before coming to Draper had

A woman walked into a psychiatrist's office leading a small white duck by a chain.

"What can I do for you, Madam?" the psychiatrist asked.

"Oh, it's not me," said the woman, "it's my husband. He thinks he's a

There are all sorts of signs hanging in business offices to stimulate thought, bring a chuckle or encourage productive activity. Signs such as Think, and What Kind Of A Day Can You Expect When It Starts With Getting Up In The Morning?

One enterprising business man, striving for efficiency in his organization, hung up one which said Do It Now!

Within 24 hours his cashier bolted with the contents of the safe, the stenographer eloped with his eldest son, and the office boy threw an ink bottle into the electric fan.—Hello.

This would be a fine world if all men showed as much patience all the time as they do when they're waiting for a fish to bite.

Anybody who's relaxed these days is probably quite nervous about it.
