CARBON MONOXIDE GAS

Auto Exhaust Fumes Contain Deadly Poison

By Dr. J. A. Sanford, Medical Director, Fieldcrest Mills

With cooler weather, comes one of the most vicious threats to human life—carbon monoxide gas poisoning. Because it is odorless, colorless, and tasteless, this gas attacks its victims without warning, frequently resulting in death.

The most common source of carbon monoxide gas is exhaust from an automobile. In cooler weather the tendency is to drive with car windows tightly closed. Exhaust fumes may seep into the car and be inhaled. Because of its characteristics, one may be unaware of the gas until symptoms develop.

The symptoms may be headache, dizziness, disturbed memory, muscular weakness, progressing to coma and death. These symptoms are due to the gas mixing with the hemoglobin and replacing the oxygen, with resultant suffocation.

Whenever coal, wood, oil or any other fuel is burned, carbon monoxide is formed.

Accidents from carbon monoxide are preventable. Don't drive with car windows tightly shut. If running the car motor in the garage, make certain there is fresh air. In your home, if using gas heating or appliances, make certain there is a source of air present.

Call a physician, at once, in any case of carbon monoxide gas poisoning. Early treatment may save the individual's life.

Credit Union Keeps Growing

The Fieldcrest Mills Credit Union has more than 2,000 members and is still growing. Although the credit union has been in operation only for a little more than a year, it is rated one of the top credit unions in the state.

The Fieldcrest Mills Credit Union is now in a position to make a limited number of auto loans, in addition to the usual smaller loans for other purposes.

Members are invited to use their credit union to save regularly by having a small amount deducted from each paycheck. They also are invited to use their credit union for low-cost loans when it is necessary for them to borrow money.

See your industrial relations supervisor for further information.
