Fred Jones, Blanket Mill training technician, uses library file in which all teaching materials are kept in numerical order. Each student removes and replaces his material.

In projection room designed for individualized showings of movies and kinescopes, students learn how to observe work motions carefully. Movie can be stopped at any point or viewed again if desired.

Fieldcrest's new MTM training facilities at General Offices were specially designed for programmed instruction. Each student is "on his own", operating independently of instructor and other students.

Bloodmobile Will Make Visit To Spray On April 6

adult in normal health can give blood without adverse effects. Donors usually leave their work or other activities, donate blood, and return immediately to whatever they are doing, said.

If there are persons who wanted to give blood but failed to do so the last time the Bloodmobile was in their locality, such persons are urged to donate blood at Spray April 6. They need not wait until the next Bloodmobile visit in their locality but will be welcomed at the Spray blood collection, Mr. Young

He urged that the relatives and friends of those who have received blood help secure donors so that blood will be available to others who need it.

Although donors are expected from all parts of the Tri-Cities, the recruiting of donors for the upcoming Bloodmobile visit will be concentrated in the Spray area. Employees of Fieldcrest plants and offices and other businesses in Spray will be solicited and asked to donate blood.

David Cook and Oscar Mills, Spray businessmen, are chairmen for recruitment in Spray outside the mills. Other individuals and groups are expected to be enlisted to help them in obtaining donors.

The Virginia-Carolina Citizens' Band Radio Club will again provide free transportation for donors who need rides to and from the Bloodmobile. The telephone number of call for free transportation will be announced ahead of the date of the blood collection.
