Fieldale Men Double Their Pledges To Fund

Going the "second mile" in the Fieldale Community Fund campaign were Duell Mitchell and Robert Ferguson, each of whom pledged two days' pay to the campaign.

Mr. Mitchell, a start-up man in the weave room, and Mr. Ferguson, a weaver, were solicited by their foreman, Robert Jamerson. "When I asked these fellows if they would be willing to pledge a day's pay," Mr. Jamerson related, "they said they'd do more than that, they'd give two days' pay."

Mr. Mitchell said he gave the extra amount because he felt the need was so great. He served on the employee committee that allocates the funds last year. "When I saw how hard it was to make the money go around, I decided right then that I would give twice what I had been giving," Mr. Mitchell said.

In addition to his Community Fund pledge, Mr. Mitchell said he also donates a lumpsum each year to the rescue squad and life-saving crew.

Mr. Ferguson said he doubled his pledge this year because the needs of the community agencies are so great. "I especially wanted to help the rescue squad and life-saving crew because they give a lot of time and do a lot of good for people," Mr. Ferguson said.

"I felt like the least I could do was to give money to help them in their work. If somebody doesn't give, then they would not have equipment and things like that to help them perform their services."

Both Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Ferguson said they believed that this year's campaign would go "over the top".

"I sure hope it does and I don't know why it shouldn't," Mr. Ferguson said.
