

Laurelcrest Service Center Gives Exo

An outstanding example of what can be accomplished in a well - conducted housekeeping program is provided by the Laurelcrest Service Center at Laurel Hill.

Good management leadership in the program has received the strong support of the employees, who take pride in maintaining cleanliness and orderliness in their work surroundings. Systematic cleaning practices have been established involving virtually every employee and there is a strict follow-up by supervision.

Equipment, floors, walls, posts, ceilings, light fixtures and air conditioning ducts are kept clean on an everyday basis. There is no special clean-up day. Floors are kept clean each day; touch-up painting is done promptly when needed; regular painting, floor finishing and other maintenance duties are kept up to date.

Floors are marked with zone lines with certain areas designated for the orderly storage of trucks, boxes and other movable equipment. Aisles and floor areas are kept free from obstructions and open for the movement of traffic.

E. J. Allard, manager, and V. L. Walters, general foreman, agreed that the primary reason for the success of the program is the active interest and cooperation of the employees.

"While management has the responsibility for housekeeping, the employees have to have pride and interest for the program to be effective," Mr. Allard said. "The most important thing about our set-up is that the employees have the desire for clean and orderly work surroundings."

Keep Safe When You Are Off the Job, Too

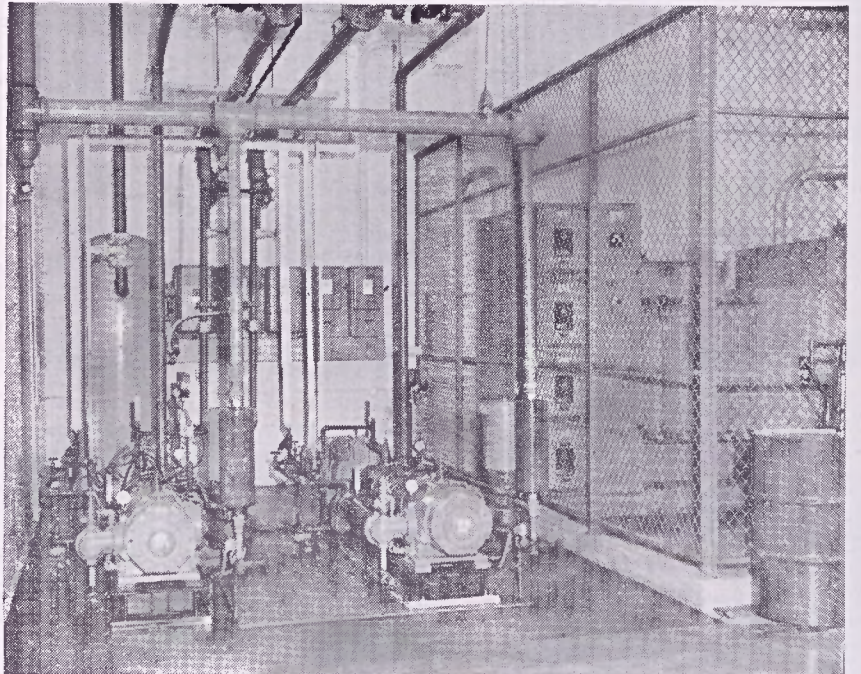

Four Fieldcresters were killed in automobile accidents during 1971 — evidence of the importance of off-the-job safety as well as accident prevention while at work.

Three employees lost their lives in auto collisions and one retired employee was struck by a car and killed.

"No one likes to read such statistics," said K. R. Baggett, Fieldcrest safety director, "but they remind us that we should all handle an automobile with care and not take chances. If you gamble your life, you could lose it."

In Sample Department, note orderly storage of carpet samples. Floors are clean and well-kept, surrounding areas orderly.

In compressor room, equipment and floor are free from oil and lint. Different colors identify air and electrical systems.
