JUST PEOPLE

Mary Sullivan

No matter what you think of life, yourself, or other people, you can't live in a vacuum.....Confucius say, "Vacuum in head may cause you to go in circles like tornado". We all have to look at life from some angle. We have to set up goals and values since we aren't just molecules, bouncing around for a little while and then dying. Do you think of people as...just people?? or, JUST PEOPLE? ?

Enough of this, let's see what a real person is according to some real people. You will not have any trouble matching these quotations with the right faculty member....."A real person is a person who leads a joyous and useful life that is filled with love and service to his Creator and his fellowmen"....."All that he is because of inner nature and because of influences or pressures that society impose on him"....."Someone who is well adjusted to his physical and social environment"..."One who can be trusted has high ideals and honor, who has a sympathetic understanding and is not self-centered"..."He is well adjusted and has well rounded desires; interested in social, economic, political and religious activities"....."A homemaker is a person who manages her home well, so that her family is healthy and happy and there is the optimum development of the individual members of the family".

NEVER A DULL MOMENT
(a letter from an alumna..)

Who would have ever thought that an elementary education major would end up teaching civics, U. S. history, N. C. history, Bible and chemistry in high school? Well, that's what happened to me. I'm teaching at Glade Valley School, a Presbyterian boarding school perched on top of the Blue Ridge Mountains in Allegheny County of North Carolina.

My day at Glade Valley begins at 6:45 A. M. Included in a day's work
