POLITICAL TOPICS

Tuesday, a week ago, the CCUM held a panel discussion on Red China. The question for discussion was: "Should Red China be admitted to the United Nations?"

The affirmative argument was presented by Karl Snyder and John Touhy. It was their contention that the government of Red China should be admitted to the U. N. because of large population.

The negative argument was presented by Dalcho Veiley and Jim Morrison. It was their contention that the government of Red China was not truly representative of the people.

The negative went on to say that Red China was disqualified from admission to the U. N. because it had been engaged in open aggression in Southeast Asia.

The affirmation quickly replied that some of the present members of the U. N. had been in open aggression.

It was a very informative discussion and it will be interesting to see the outcome of such discussions in the United Nations.
