

THE MARK OF TRUTH

I often think back to my early teens when I thought of college as a place where intelligent people went to become more intelligent and to discuss ideas. I thought that college students were so smart that they would always consider carefully all sides of an issue before they would even consider a change.

Now that I am in college, I find that all it takes in some campuses is a magic-marker and lots of poster board. Also, a good pair of marching shoes and plenty of filthy clothes are essential. I for one am far lacking in my wardrobe but I'm sure that if I were to write to the Berkley campus of the University of California that I would receive countless pounds of literature. I'm sure that among this would be the following source material: "The demonstration handbook for today's college student," "The do's and don'ts of traffic stopping," "How to break a cop's leg in one easy lesson," "The best way to deface a college campus," "How to make the most of four years of rioting," "The best way to stick parents for money," "and most of all" "Flunking out is fun."

This is definitely the year that Montreat-Anderson will make her mark on the world. It must be the white mark of truth and not the red smear of perversion that is found in so many of our sister campuses.

A lively discussion followed with the concensus being that a Christian should lead the best life he possibly can and when possible make a verbal
